Extra 16
pages of Adventurer!

FIRSTLY thanks to all those who bought issue # 1. We exceeded our own expectations within one week of release date! You'll notice that this issue is printed on better paper, it should have been on this paper last issue but one of those commy spies from the White Army must have bribed the printers or something! We continue the Rolemaster scenario which you all loved last issue, and from downtown U.S.A. comes an 'official' (!) Villains and Vigilantes scenario. Who says we don't cater for a variety of tastes, huh? I think you will also be spellbound by Rob Nott's Magik article, Fire on High. Thanks also for the healthy response to our Cover Story competition. After reading some of the entries, I couldn't sleep at nights. One entry in particular made me think that there's some awfully sick people out there (no names mentioned, Mr.). Anyway, this is issue #2. I hope you like it, I certainly do. Either way, more feedback please.

Ste Dillon.

YOUR GATEWAY TO ADVENTURE

the BLACK TOWER

by John S. Davies

· part two ·

to rivalry between the two cults. Their temple has seven lesser clerics, of levels 1 to 4 and a 7th. level priest, and they also employ members of the assassins guild.

The Plains Of Desolation

The area south of the River Feoran, and north of the Kelviroy mountains is a barren waste. The area around the tower itself is even more desolate. The vegetation is sickly and the area is constantly overcast. There is a 20% chance per day (cumulative) that it will rain.

The area is inhabited by various creatures set as guards. Encounters will occur on a roll of 1 on d8. On the Plains of Desolation, encounters should be checked for every hour, and within 3 miles of the tower, every 20 minutes. Roll d8 to determine encounter on the plains, and d10 to determine encounter within 3 miles of the tower.

1-6. A group of 5-8 low level undead.
7-8. A group of 2-5 medium level undead.

9. A group of 1-2 Flaymes.
10. A guard from the tower; a monk of the order of nightstalkers. Note that the nightstalkers wear black, giving them a +15 bonus on hiding in dark and shadows.

The Black Tower

Map B shows the tower, a black, seamless, stone-like material. It rises 130 feet in total, the upper 50' being narrower than the base. The walls are only broken by a door at ground level, and by arrow slits at various levels. There are always guards on the roof areas, though overcast conditions limit their view to 200' or 100' in the rain.

The ground level door is false; the only way in is by rope ladder, which can be dropped from the lower roof level. The walls of the tower are smooth, making climbing more difficult than usual.

Level 7

1. This is an enclosed area surrounding the top of the central stair. To the left of the doorway are 4 buckets, used for collecting water from the roof tank.

2. This is the upper roof of the tower. It is surrounded by a 5' high, slitted wall. The roof is patrolled by a nightstalker monk, armed with a bow and a quiver of 20 arrows. If he hears any commotion from the stairs, he will investigate.

3. This is a 15' square, 8' high, stone tank in which rainwater is collected. Due to the local weather conditions it is usually full. A ladder leads up the side of it.

Level 6: The Cells

All ceilings inside the tower are 15' high. All doors are made of wood and open outwards.

1. The guard room. In here are a bed, a table, two chairs, five sets of manacles and a ring of keys hanging on a hook on the northern wall. There is always at least 1 guard in here. There is a 15% chance that another guard is here, hence a 35% chance that they will be drinking!

The other rooms on this level are all cells. Each contain some dirty straw and a ring fixed to the wall for fixing manacles to.

2. A farmer was captured and put in this cell 2 days ago.

3. A woman, wearing a plain smock with dirty, scruffy hair. It is Elbian, Priestess of Shayvere. She has been kept alive by Kell to use the relic. Elbian will be very suspicious of anyone in the tower, but if the party can convince her they are here to rescue the relic, she will be inclined to help them. Elbian knows the powers of the relic, but will not disclose its secrets. She will only use the relic to heal a party member if necessary.

4. The door to this cell is obviously stronger than the others in the tower. In here is a large Ogre slave, used for heavy duty work and as a deterrent to intruders. he wears a gold bracelet worth 35 gold pieces. The bracelet is magical and acts a tranquiliser. If the ogre is released, he will accompany the party, obeying any direct commands, providing they are simple enough for him to understand. If the bracelet is removed, he will attack the nearest living thing. In rolemaster, the bracelet detects as channeling.

Level 5: Dining Rooms/ Kitchen

1 and 2. These are dining rooms. They have tables and chairs, though the table tops are scarred and stained. Room 1 is generally used by the guards, room 2 by the priests.

3. The kitchen, containing standard kitchen equipment (no micro-waves!). In the NW corner of the room is a fire-pit. if the western wall is examined, a row of fine slits will be seen along the top, acting as smoke vents. The room is, however, smokey most of the time. There is a 50% chance that the 'cook' will be present.

4. Storage room. Boxes of preserved meat and vegetables are kept here,

This is the second episode of The Black Tower, designed for use with Rolemaster or AD&D. The first part of the scenario appeared in issue 1 of ADVENTURER. Characters who have played the first part, Beason's Keep, should have one or two minor magic items each.

GM's Background

This part of the adventure is set in the area to the south of Coovrail; see map A.

In episode 1, characters were led to Kavank, where they discovered the theft of a relic which was on its way from Coovrail, to the Temple of Shayvere in Kavank. They investigated a ruined keep, where the thief Thurgal Garvak had made his base. A crude map was found directing the players to the Black Tower in the south.

In this episode, players progress to the Black Tower, the home and temple of Kell, high priest of Zyrgal, God of darkness. The party can start either in Coovrail or Kavank. If they have not played through episode 1, they can be introduced to the scenario via:

(a) Sou-vaydan High Priestess of Shayvere can hire the players to rescue the relic and the missing Priestess, Elbian.

(b) Sources in Coovrail could point the party in the direction of the Black Tower. Coovrail has a small temple to the lesser god, Toovik, god of disease, who would be quite willing to hire a party to attack the Black Tower, owing along with 3 kegs of weak ale. Tucked away in a corner is a cask of moderately good wine. There is a 15% chance of the cook being here.

5. The cook's bedroom containing a bed with a chest underneath. The chest is locked (Rolemaster: medium (+0) to pick) and the cook has the key. In the chest are clothing, personal items and an empty pouch.

Level 4: Guards Quarters

The latrine at the NW corner of the roof, and those on the lower levels, are chutes leading out of the tower. They are washed out once or twice per day. The doors on this level are all stained black.

1. Lower roof area. This area is surrounded by a 5' high, slitted wall. There are coiled rope ladders for use in entering the tower. The area is patrolled by 4 nightstalker guards, armed with swords and bows. If they hear noises inside, they will investigate.

2 and 3. These are the guards' barracks. In each there are 10 beds, each with a footlocker (Rolemaster: medium (+0) to pick) containing black clothing and d4-1 gold pieces. In room 3 is an extra bed belonging to the guard captain. The footlocker is locked (Rolemaster: hard (-10) to pick) and contains the same black clothing, and 15 gold pieces.

10 guards live in each room. At any time there will be 1-6 guards asleep in each room. Each is a light sleeper, and will take 30 seconds to fully awaken. During the night, the guard captain will also be asleep, in room 3.

4. This is the guards' combat practice room. At the western end of the room are 4 straw dummies and a selection of wooden practice swords. Against the eastern wall are two targets, and 3 quivers of arrows, with 30 arrows per quiver. In front of the dummies is a 20' square straw mat, used for martial arts practice.

Level 3: Priests' Living Quarters

1. This passageway gives a view of the surrounding area, through a number of arrow slits. The passage is patrolled by 4 nightstalker guards.

2-6. These are the living rooms/bedrooms of the lesser priests. Each contains a table, one bed and one chair per occupant. There are writing materials on each table. Each room also contains a locked chest (Rolemaster: medium (+0) to pick) per occupant.

Two lower level clerics live in each of rooms 2, 3, 4 and 5. One higher level cleric lives in room 6.

The chests in rooms 2 and 3 contain clothing, personal effects and 3-30 silver pieces each. The chests in 4 and 5 contain 5-50 silver pieces each, and the chest in 6 contains 97 silver pieces and 3 gold pieces.

7. The study/library. Contains a medium sized table, a writing desk with pens, ink and sheets of paper, 6 chairs, a large bookcase against the northern wall and a smaller, locked bookcase against the eastern wall. This is where the clerics come to study aspects of their religion, and to study the use of spells. If the writing materials on the desk are examined, some of the sheets of paper will have written notes concerning Zyrgal and their religion.

The larger, northern bookcase contains about 30 books. All of these contain writings about Zyrgal, methods of workmanship, lists of special ceremonies and Zyrgal's interactions with other gods and goddesses. In total, they could be worth 20-30 gold pieces to a collector of religious texts.

The eastern bookcase is locked (Rolemaster: very hard (-20) to pick).

Rolemaster: In the bookcase are 39 books covering channeling spell lists. 10 books cover the opening channeling lists, to 10th level and another 10 cover the same lists from 11th to 20th level. 5 books cover closed channeling lists; one on locating ways to 10th level, one on creations to 10th level, one on symbolic ways to 10th level, one on calm spirits to 10th level. The fifth covers calm spirits from 11th to 20th level. There are 3 books covering the cleric base lists; summons, communal ways and life mastery, each to 10th level. Finally, there are 11 books covering the evil cleric base lists, one set for 1st to 10th level, one set for 11 to 20th level, and one smaller book covering the 25th level spell from the necromancy list, create undead V (worth 250 GPs). The books of open, closed and cleric base lists could be sold to most temples, but the evil base lists will have a very limited market. The evil cleric base list books are all cursed, such that any reader who is not a worshipper of Zyrgal must resist a 20th level channeling attack, or be struck by excommunication (curses: evil cleric base list). The curses on the books will resist removal at 20th level. All books to 10th level are worth 70 GPs each. All books to 20th level are worth 120 GPs each, providing a buyer may be found.

For AD&D: in the eastern bookcase are seven scrolls. The bookcase is protected by a glyph of warding which will do 20 points of electrical damage to anybody opening it.

Scroll 1: Cause light wound (x3).
Scroll 2: Animate dead (x3), speak with dead.

Scroll 3: Putrify food and drink, Destroy water.

Scroll 4: Blandness, Disease, Poison.

Scroll 5: Harm (reverse Heal).

Scroll 6: Protection from magic.

Scroll 7: Protection from undead (all undead).

Under the scrolls are 5 blocks of Incense of Meditation.

Level 2

1. This is identical to area 1 on level 3.
2. Kell's living room and study. There is a table, 3 chairs and a writing desk in the eastern section of the room. On the desk are pen, ink and paper.

Around the room are tapestries in red on black, depicting scenes of battle.

Rolemaster: Behind tapestry A, inscribed on the wall, there is a symbol of curse of dake (curses: evil cleric base list), which will affect the first person who sees it, at an attack level of 12. Behind tapestry B is a symbol of healing 3-30 (concussion's ways: open channeling list), which will be charred unless Kell or Chassly have used it during the current day. Both symbols work once per day.

AD&D: Cast on tapestry A and B are glyphs of warding. The one on A will do 20 points of fire damage if the tapestry is touched, and the one on B will cause blindness if touched.

3. This is Chassly's living room and bedroom containing a bed, a small table, a chair and a writing desk with pen, ink and paper. The bed is covered with an ornate, silk bedspread worth 15 gold pieces. Under the bed is a chest, 1' square x 6" deep. It is locked (Rolemaster: hard (-10) to pick), and is trapped with a vial of gas, which will break open unless disarmed before the chest is opened. The gas will fill a 10' radius sphere.

Rolemaster: This is a gaseous form potion imbedded with minor pain (mind attack: mentalist base list). The chest contains a set of books covering the astrologer base list, to 10th level.

AD&D: The gas is poisonous, causing d10 points of damage to anyone who fails a save vs. poison. In the chest is a scroll of cause serious wounds, which Chassly will use if she has the opportunity.

On the eastern wall is a tapestry showing the constellations visible in the night sky from the tower. It is 30' x 10' and worth 55 gold pieces.

4. Kell's bedroom. In the NE corner of the room is an ornate, 4-poster bed. Under the bed is a locked footlocker (Rolemaster: hard (-10) to pick). In the chest are clothing and a pouch, which contains a small emerald (6 GPs) and a golden pin (10 GPs).

Rolemaster: The pin is a +1 essence spell adder. Kell knows it is magical, but is unsure how.

AD&D: In the chest is a book of Vile Darkness, and a scroll of flamestrike, which Kell will use if he has the chance.

Dominating the western end of the room is a 8' tall stone throne. It is plain, made of a dark grey stone.

Rolemaster: A worshipper of Zyrgal who sits in the throne can cast commune 1 (communal ways: cleric base list), once per day. The first non-worshipper of Zyrgal to sit in the throne must resist a 50th level channeling attack or be transported to the altar (4) on level 1. This will only happen once a day.

AD&D: Once per day, a worshipper of Zyrgal who sits in the throne can cast commune. Anyone else who sits in it must save vs. magic at -6 or be teleported to the altar (4) on level 1. The teleport works once per day.

Anyone teleported to the altar will suffer the effects of touching it, as described later.

The secret door in the northern wall is well concealed (Rolemaster: extremely hard (-30) to detect).

5. Kell and Chassly's bathroom. In the centre of the room is a large, bronze bath. In the NE corner of the room is a small stove, a pile of wood, and two bronze buckets used for heating water.

Level 1: The Temple

1. This is the false door on the outside of the tower. It is made of bronze, but is painted gold. It is carved with finely detailed scenes of battle. The door is locked (Rolemaster: very hard (-20) to pick), but the hinges are accessible from the outside. Behind the door is a solid wall.

Rolemaster: On the wall is a symbol of hearing loss (disease: evil cleric base list), which is activated on sight. It works once per day, at attack level 12.

AD&D: Cast on the wall behind the door is a glyph of warding which will cause deafness.

2. This passageway is in a filthy state, and the smell from it permeates the whole level. There is filth and old straw throughout, and the walls show many scratch marks. It is the home of the temple watchdogs, a pack of 8 dogs which have been raised as undead. The bars over the entrance to this passageway and those on the entrance to the stairway inhibit the mobility of the pack. Normally, the pack is left in this passageway, but if necessary, the stairway can be sealed off, and the pack can be let loose in the temple area. The controls for the bars are at 5.

There are 2 trapdoors in the ceiling of this passageway, which lead up to area 1 on level 2. These are used to drop prisoners or small animals down to the pack. When the pack has been let into the temple, this is how they are lured back: any watchdogs who stay in the temple can be herded back by Kell. The pack is usually only let loose in the temple when Kell is away from the tower.

3. This is the main temple area, and is obviously different from any room in the tower. The floor is made of golden stone blocks. The walls are of the same black stone-like material as the rest of the tower, but here they are carved with epic battle scenes. The golden floor starts at the entrances from the stairway and outer passageway, and ends at the dais. In each corner of the room stands a 7' 6" tall statue of a man wearing chainmail, armed with a 2-handed sword. If any living creature touches them, they will animate one at a time until each one is defeated. They are mindless.

When a statue is brought to 0 hits, it will fall and break into pieces. If the rubble from the SW statue is examined, a black +2/+10 bastard sword will be found.

4. This is a stepped dais made of black stone. On top is a rectangular block of red stone. Anyone touching this block will be affected, and if they resist the effect, will gain a +1/+5 bonus on further resistance rolls to the block.

Rolemaster: Anybody touching the altar will be struck by absolution (dark channels: evil cleric base list) at 50th level.

AD&D: Anyone touching the altar must save vs. magic at -8, or the offending limb will wither (reverse regeneration).

5. This is the bottom of the central stairway. On the southern wall is a lever, currently in the up position. If it is pulled down, the bars between here and the main temple will drop, while the bars between the temple and the outer passageway will rise. Pulling the lever up reverses the situation. The lever is out of reach of someone reaching through the bars by at least 3'.

In the floor, under the stairs, is a concealed trapdoor (Rolemaster:

medium (+0) to spot), which leads to a spiral stair. This leads to the room below the tower. If Kell is in the lower room, he will hear the party in the temple, fighting the statues, and will attempt to trap the intruders by going to the level and closing the temple off from the rest of the tower. This will also let loose the undead dogs.

Level 1a

This room is approximately 30' below ground level. The ceiling is 8' high. The room is used by Kell as a second study, and for storing ceremonial items. In the eastern area of the room is a desk and a chair. There are 2 chests in the northern area.

On the desk are writing materials and some notes about Zyrgal, and some books of ancient myths and legends. The books on myths and legends are mostly written in obscure languages, which will need expert translation. These could be used to introduce surviving characters to new adventures.

The larger of the chests measures 4' x 3' x 2', and is locked (Rolemaster: hard (-10) to pick). Inside the chest are 3 ceremonial robes, and an ornate dagger worth 14 GPs. It is symbolic, and has no edge or point. There are also 6 silver candlesticks and 24 red and black banded candles, plus a timber box with flint and steel.

The second chest is a 2' cube. It is also locked (Rolemaster: very hard (-20) to pick). Inside is a 1' cubic box. This box is made of polished black wood, and has the symbol of Shayvere, a golden chalice, on the top, inlaid in silver. This box is unlocked. The inside of the box is lined with white velvet, and contains the sacred chalice of Shayvere.

The secret door in the northern part of the room (Rolemaster: hard (-10) to spot) leads to a tunnel which goes NE for 4 miles, and leads to the surface, through a concealed exit.

INTRODUCTION TO STAR FLEET BATTLES (£4.95) Published by Task Force Games. A 48-page rules booklet with colourful card cover. What a surprise to see Star Fleet Battles, for years a technically difficult game to master, and becoming harder, arrive on my desk in this simple introductory manner. It begins from scratch, explaining game terms such as hex and scenario in a straightforward manner. The book continues to explain star fleet terminology such as Seeking Weapons and SSD.

A sequence of "programmed instructions" modules get the player started straight away via a battle drill training exercise. Only the rules for manoeuvre and firing are given, as these are all that are needed to play the opening scenario. Each scenario gets progressively more complex, introducing the relevant new rules step-by-step. No less than 6 cadet scenarios are given as training, prior to promotion to the rank of Lieutenant and the chance to swap your cadet ship

Shipping and Storage is the only clue left by the criminals as to their whereabouts. Jewel thieves, however, are surely a job for the New York Police Department? Or do the police's underground contacts lead them to believe that beneath this facade of petty crime there is something too tough for them to handle? Thus are the heroes called into action.

That's pretty much how Organised Crime starts: no game master's overview of the plot is provided, it's just straight into the action. It's an interesting approach to scenario design but not one that I think works in this particular case. The adventure consists of a number of relatively easy sections which link up the major confrontations; the plot is therefore presented in a number of capsules. As a result, the game master has to pick up the threads of the plot as he reads the adventure through. A summary of the story and the motives of the villains at the start of the adventure would have assisted in getting a feel for the plot and the overall direction of the adventure. If the writing style of the adventure were a little tighter and less hackneyed the scenario might have worked much better in this format.

Enough of my initial gripes. Organised Crime is a two part adventure, each part being made up of a number of capsules. Whilst these capsules fragment the plot they make the adventure very easy to run by keeping all the relevant information in one place. The production is in keeping with FGU standards; clear enough for the game master to work out what's happening. The heroes' regular opponents are a group known as The Midnight Men which, naturally enough, contains two women... This group is nicely balanced for the level of heroes the adventure is aimed at (three to six player characters from second to sixth level).

The overall flavour of the adventure is very reminiscent of the Batman TV series. There's a wacky finale with a host of bizarre antagonists, and one of the earlier antagonists is a poor substitute for the Riddler. This should provide light entertainment in a serious campaign, although is rather limited in its applications beyond this. The plot line is rather too linear for my liking and suffers from weak links, some of which are dependent on the heroes behaving like 'true heroes' - or rather what the scenario's designer envisages as being true heroes. Organised Crime is also rather too combat-oriented, but with a little creativity on the part of the game master it should provide a few sessions of interesting play. I would hope that future V&V adventures get away from what is essentially a D&D style of adventure - which is caused essentially by an over-obsession with trivial detail. I've seen Superhero adventures which are versatile and concentrate on plot, as well as providing the necessary combat encounters which are vital to the running of the scenario: compared to these, Organised Crime only runs as average for the genre.

IAN MARSH

for a full size Commander's ship. 12 scenarios are played in all, cumulating with The Tholian Web and the graduation to Star Fleet Captain!

SSDs are given for 3 cadet cruisers and 6 full scale cruisers, a pull-out hex map and card counters, together with all relevant movement, energy and damage allocation charts. In all, a well planned introduction to SFB of benefit to new players and clubs wishing to taste the excitement of Star Fleet command. Introduction to SFB also serves as an excellent solo instruction module.

STE DILLON

FLASHING BLADES (£10.75) Published by F.G.U.

The box is unattractive; the contents dull by comparison with the recent wave of 'glossy cover' jobs. Needless to say, I bought the game anyway.

This is the game of 17th century France, of Arthos, Porthos, Aramis and D'Artagnan, of the dastardly Cardinal Richlieu and the unfortunate problem over the diamonds (...shh! don't tell the King!). Having felt that the period is one of excellent opportunities for role-playing for some time, I was very pleased to see this game hit the shelves.

The game consists of two books; the main rulebook and an adventure booklet, along with a referee's screen and a master character sheet for photocopying. It is illustrated with contemporary and modern drawings, the rules are clear and easy to read. Unlike most FGU games, Flashing Blades is totally devoid of abbreviations and is elegant in its simple yet sophisticated mechanics. Using familiar role-playing characteristics and mechanics makes it easy to learn and play. The combat system is certainly the high point of the mechanics, using a d20 based system reminiscent of Runequest, but with no more number-juggling than most. With this, it reproduces duelling with foils and rapiers in a wonderful manner, offering several choices of attack; thrust, lunge or slash, and of defence; dodge, duck, sidestep, step back. These are quickly cross-referenced on a matrix for a modifier. The combat system also incorporates pistols, muskets, brawling weapons and less subtle weapons such as the pike and halberd. Despite a realistic feel, it is not slow to play.

Combat is to be avoided, it seems, as a couple of skewers in your chest and you're an ex-Pierre. Duels can be quite heated simply since both parties know the risks; maybe that's why duelling is usually only to first blood! Moving away from this potentially deadly area, the book moves on to explore the society that your budding characters will emerge into. Careers in the army, the church, the bureaucracy, the nobility and banking are described. There is a system of advancement and promotion similar to Traveller character generation, but as part of an ongoing campaign, and probably superceded by the seductions, grovelling, toadying and brown-nosing that the players resort to in play. This is a game where activities between adventures can be as much fun as the actual adventure session; in this 'dog-eat-dog' society, there is much opportunity to back-stab and be back-stabbed.

17th century France is detailed in the meticulous fashion that we've come to expect from FGU. A comprehensive survey of the social customs, dress, politics, major figures, 16th and 17th century history and maps of Europe, France and Paris concludes with a bibliography of the major sources used.

The Adventures book is the scenario pack which, though thin and weak by FGU standards, compares favourably with many other games. The major scenario is a romp to Italy and back in 'musketeer' style, the other a seedy intrigue in the backstreets of Paris - both worthy of a couple of sessions of play. If Parisian Adventures and High Seas are of this quality, I shall make purchase soon. Since High Seas expands into the Carribean and the world of piracy, this broadens the appeal and variety of the game.

To conclude, Flashing Blades is a professional, well-written game with none of the excessive numbers that most games have. The combat system enchantingly reproduces duelling whilst accommodating the (safer) alternative of fisticuffs. Its coverage of 17th century France details a rich and exciting society in which players can live, love, intrigue and, hopefully, succeed.

COSMIC ENCOUNTER (£10.95)

Published by GAMES WORKSHOP under licence from WEST END GAMES. This old Eon favourite is now once again available in a new edition from Games Workshop. The new version looks different: the artwork has been completely redone; a jigsaw board has replaced the old giant hexagons; the Destiny discs are replaced by a pack of cards; and in place of the old cardboard counters we now have three-dimensional (and stackable) plastic pawns. This is all fine, except that the cone-shaped pawns are nearly impossible for fumble-fingered players (like me) to pick up. Greg Costikyan (no less) has been called in to rewrite the rules; as far as I can see, the new rulebook makes no changes to the game at all, but it is much clearer than the original version, and several troublesome ambiguities have been cleared up. A good job, this.

There is one important difference from the original game. The Eon version was for only four players; the equipment for a fifth and a sixth player was added, along with other material, in the first two of the nine (yes, nine!) expansion sets produced by Eon. The new edition includes those first two expansion sets as well as the original game; it can therefore be played by up to six people, and the game is definitely most enjoyable when played by five or six.

You start the game in control of a planetary system with five planets. In your turn you attack another player's planet with a combination of tokens and a card from your hand; he defends with the tokens he has on that planet and a card of his own. Both of you may call upon the other players to ally by contributing tokens to one side or the other. Each side totals its tokens and cards; the higher total wins. If you win as attacker, you get a base on that planet; if the defender wins, you don't. In either case, all the tokens on the losing side go to the Warp, a sort of limbo from which you can recover your tokens only gradually. The winner is the first player to get five bases on opposing planets.

This sounds tedious enough, but I'm saving something. Each player has a special "alien" power, unique to him, which allows him to do something no one else can do. For example the Empath can change one card into a different one; the Trade, if he doesn't fancy his own hand, can exchange hands with his opponent; the Assessor can drain away the other players' tokens by levying a tax; and the Judge can give bonuses to the winner or the loser of an attack, at his whim. Furthermore, there are certain cards which allow the holder to do something outrageous, such as playing out of turn, sending inconvenient allies home, changing the outcome of an attack, or (the dreaded Cosmic Zap) stopping an opponent from using his alien power. The fun in Cosmic Encounter derives from the rapid explosion of one little bombshell after another, as players constantly strive to mess up one another's well-laid plans. This is a game of skill, though the skill required is the ability to adapt rapidly to constantly-changing circumstances, rather than the ability to pursue a long-term game plan with single-minded dedication.

There are a few problems. The Judge character seems far too powerful, and there are conflicts between alien powers (such as between the Anti-Matter and the Virus) which are impossible to resolve according to the rules. Still, these are minor problems, and the game as a whole works very well indeed; for sheer entertainment value, Cosmic Encounter is hard to beat. Anyone who missed out on the original edition eight years ago should hurry out to buy this one.

LARRY TRASK

FANTASY WARGAMING
(£7.95) by PSL books.

This is a hardback book containing 220 pages. It is basically a book about fantasy wargaming, providing a realistic rules system reminiscent of Chivalry and Sorcery. The system has its roots in the dark ages, and appeals for a coherent and static setting for fantasy role-games. The book was published in 1981, and suffers slightly by being a bit dated, but then so does D&D. The book's strongest point is the flavour which it lends to FRP games. Reading the chapter on medieval society really puts you in the mood for a role-play session. Myth, magic and religion in an intelligent approach to magic and sorcery, covering subjects such as power; THEIR POWER COMES FROM YOUR BELIEF. THE GREATEST SOURCE OF MANA IS YOURSELF. This theme that gods obtain power from their very worship is one which very easily transpires into other games systems, and runs throughout the FW system. A mini-bestiary is included, again based on dark/middle ages mythology, incorporating Norse, Celtic, Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic beliefs. The weapons section covers an overview of weapons and armour types, army organisations, siege warfare and a glossary of arms and armour. Following a chapter on the source and inspiration for fantasy games, is an inspired article on refereeing, making it quite clear to the beginning and experienced referee what his real job is! The character creation system is rather complex, accounting for astrological modifications to the rolled PC, his place in the social structure, personality, skills, religion, leadership qualities, skills and a 'bogey table' of guises or character traits. Rules for group combat follow this, including a 'warrior table' for various cultures. The religion/magic system is what really makes FW. It contains tables of deities with their characteristics, interests and influences, etc. Spells are cast taking into account controllers and diminishers, astrological influences, elemental matters, intercession, dreams, miracles and inspiration. If your god is on your side, ok, but if not, you better be prepared to resolve your differences.

£7.95 for a hardback book? Yes, it does sound a lot for a book that was published in 1981, but it does contain a complete system that is inspired and self-contained. FW is not a game for beginners, but is a suitable alternative for anybody seeking a realistic, coherent fantasy game.

A LEAF THROUGH MAGAZINES

Due out in mid-May is TORTURED SOULS #9, providing they can find a decent distributor ... Now that Paul Cockburn (ex-Imagine) has temporarily taken over the editor's seat at White Dwarf, I wonder if Gamesmaster, presently at issue #3, will get to see #4. Oh, and whatever happen to the Irish magazine, Fantasy Chronicles? Well, Ian Brown has just informed me that issue #1 is due out at the start of May. It costs 95p for 40 pages, the paper quality is even better than ours. It feels somewhat like Tortured Souls, with An Introduction To Gaming, THE CRYPT OF THE SERPENT AD&D scenario, a short fantasy story, wargaming, book reviews and more. Distributed through games shops and newsagents. We wish you all the best with that one, Ian.

DIFFERENT WORLDS #41 has just arrived at my desk. A U.S. import, you'd expect the reviews to be more up-to-date than to include Dr. Who, Runequest III and SCOUTS for Traveller, but this is the Jan/Feb issue, so it takes its time swimming over her. Anyway, a great magazine packed with reviews, a Frank Frazetta interview with some of his piccies in. This issue also includes a 7-page Morrow Project adventure, a Doc Savage Chronology that lends to the belief that Chaosium are designing a Doc Savage Game! Also covers rules for playing insane characters in Cthulhu.

WHITE DWARF SWINGS THE AXE

The White Dwarf has recently moved premises from London to the Citadel plant in Nottingham. Between you and I, this may have caused some interesting problems ... several members of the WD staff have objected to the move by "opting to remain in London", despite being given the wonderful opportunity of moving house and home, and leaving their playmates in the big smog to move to remotest Nottingham (incredible!). Latest victims of the well-swinged axe include Ian Marsh (ex-editor), Trevor Mendham (ex-news columnist), Paul Mason (ex-something-or-other), Jon Sutherland (ex-advertising editor), and Joe Dever (ex-tabletop heroes; decided he doesn't just want to paint citadel figures for eternity).

As far as I can make out, the magazine should be undergoing a not-so-radical transformatin into a Games Workshop/Citadel magazine. Methinks it may be called something exciting like "Citadel Magazine."

LOW COST IMPORTS:

Star Fleet Battles will soon be available to mere mortals at only £14.95. Also available from Task Force will be back issues of Nexus magazine. SFB miniatures and a new range of fantasy figures called "off-the-wall-armies." These include floppy-eared rabbit soldiers, yankee badgers with bagpipes, otter warriors (?) etc. Having cast a cursory glance at these off-beat figures, they look very nice with clear detail, but do we really need them? Who knows.

Another drop in price will be MERP (the U.S. version) at £8.95, and I believe a few rule-books at £5.95. MERP is being translated in Germany, where it will be available as separate rules, scenarios, etc.

DID YOU KNOW?

... STARDATE ... 1979 ... Earth ... In Different Worlds #2, Steve Jackson (USA) states "Let me offer a definition of a role-playing game, then, one that will surely stand until it is shot down. A role-playing game is one that invites its players to take on a personality different from their own."

Has anybody managed to shoot this definition down yet?

HEROQUEST was given a sneak preview in DW #4!! For those who don't know, Heroquest was the much publicised, eagerly awaited Runequest supplement that never actually materialised. Runequest, by the way, cost just £8.95 in 1979.

The Journal of Traveller's Aid Society first appeared, as did the AD&D Dungeon Masters Guide and Freedom In The Galaxy.

NEXT ISSUE

In ADVENTURER #3, we continue Rob Nott's magikarticle, so keep your spell books to hand. Andy Bradbury offers Cthulhu cultists a chance to start their own cult. On the scenario side, we're keeping it secret, but you can bet it will be a biggie!

Ian Marsh joins the rest of the ADVENTURER team next issue, and a name from the fanzine world will also appear. Lee Gibbons fuses the past with the future in his specially assigned ADVENTURER cover art, providing another spectacular poster, while Robin Parry offers Cthulhu humour via another d3 cartoon, and an ADVENTURER portrait of the photographer.

Victory Games are pumping out the 007 supplements lately. Back Of Beyond presents a new adventure never before seen in book or movie! Villains presents deadly villains for Bond to seduce or subdue, and Bond Assault is a combat board game for detailed operations. To my count, that's 14 adventures/supplements to the basic rules, emphasizing Victory Games' confidence in their only RPG to date.

NATIONAL GARDEN FESTIVAL

Games People Play is the name of the exhibition to be held at Stoke from 9-13 July 1986. Every effort is being made to provide competitions, special games and the opportunity to participate. There should be a large space allotted to the fantasy games world under the ADVENTURER umbrella, and I can imagine the mayhem that this will cause. Such frivolous goings-on as a draw-the-artist or duck-the-editor of ADVENTURER may yet materialise. Add to this the opportunity to get sneak previews of the latest games and miniatures, ADVENTURER #3, enter figure painting competitions, have your figure photographed, indulge in live role-playing, real treasure hunts such as "Spot the Tavern," etc. and you should have an interesting day out. Of course, you could always visit the rest of the festival, including a labyrinth of trees and plants, narrowboat rallies, 80 theme gardens, railways, hot air balloons, nature reserves, and various exhibitions and shows. Tickets cost from £4.50 a day (adult) or £3 a day (child/student/unemployed).

TIME WARP

On 26th July, there is an event to take place in the Shaftsbury Hotel in Liverpool called TIME WARP. Organised by Time Warriors, a Liverpool based re (and pre!) enactment organisation, it is a one day SF/Military games/modelling exhibition. Participants include the Mailed Fist, Birmingham Modelling group, and representatives of the Sealed Knot, but more recruits are needed to make a really spectacular event. Admission is 50p for adults, 25p children. If your club or society is interested in participating you can telephone Bob Wooder on 051-734 2287 or write to him at 21 Hartingdon Road, Liverpool L8 0SD.

Hail and well met, fair ADVENTURER! All ye who have ears to listen and a mind with which to think, I pray ye take heed! Selora the Sorceress hast robbed me of mine mind, and with it, all recollections of who I may be. If thou hast thoughts or knowledge through magick or the divine arts, then I pray thee help me! I must know of my quest which lies before me, to where I am bound and from whence I came. My name must be told, for in names lies the secret of men's destiny. I pray thee, oh scribes, to put quill to parchment and tell me what thou knowest!!

Feature artist this issue is Ralph Horsley, whose work we should be featuring within the pages of ADVENTURER. Ralph is already known in the fanzine world for his Convert Or Die 'zine (now up to issue #3).

KILLER FIENDS

Ghosts and ghouls and skeletons too, haunting corridors, following you, running through doors into unmarked chambers, running through doors into un-named strangers. You're fighting demons with your sword and shield. Mages and clerics your wounds they can heal. Where other bold fighters have perished, slaying monsters you have relished. Clerics, druids, magicians and monks, barbarian fighters and all kind of hunks though falling dead all around, they hardly make a single sound. Each person wearing differing armour; all adds to the glitter and clamour; leather, banded, scale and studded; plate, padded, ring and splinted. each has a weapon of somekind, eager to see what treasure they find after the death of those killer fiends.
From a poem by Angus Abranson.

A sound piece of advice from A. Ward: Whenever I lose a cherished PC who I am particularly fond of, I tend to create a new one with different characteristics and personality. I then muster all my will-power and either destroy, sell or swap the lead figure which represented my character, no matter how much he has meant to me, or how well-painted he is. This, I feel, adds a deeper sense of remorse when a PC dies. Ultimately, it means that my player-characters act far more cautiously than do my friends, whose PCs often seem to have a death-wish.

FIGURES FRONT

By Martyn Tetlow

FRONT LINE:

This issue, DENIZEN MINIATURES of Brighton march up to the Front Line. To them goes the dubious honour of being the first figures to be showcased in ADVENTURER. Denizen Miniatures are the creations of CHUB PEARSON, who began making his own figures 6 years ago. Chub informs me that he started off making model kits and the like when he was only little (I'm not sure if that means he used to be a Hobbit!), and began his serious modelling with the much larger scale of 90mm. Working as a freelance designer with Barton Miniatures, Chub decided that he would like to become more involved in the actual production side of the business, as well as the design stage. He took the logical step of producing his own figures, switching to 25mm scale but still retaining the detail of his former work.

The first dozen or so figures were cast by a sub-contract firm, advertised, and found to be in demand. Thus Denizen Miniatures was born. Over the past 3 1/2 years, the range has grown to some 60 figures, along with a DIY of dwarves which provide an almost endless list of variations. Interest in the figures has been such that Denizen now have distributors in Germany, Australia, France and Sweden, and look set to break into the US market.

Chub now has his own mouldmaking and casting facilities, combining the whole operation under one roof. He now makes the figures, makes the moulds, casts the figures, designs the catalogues, writes the invoices and feeds the cat! Apart from retail outlets, Denizen offer a mail order service, for which customers should thank Jean.

The figures received for review were a good cross-section of the range, and I only wish I'd been able to have more of them painted for this issue, had copy dates not approached with such immodest haste. The Elf Bowman is a particularly elegant figure, and without the pointy ears could surely double as a Greek or Roman god in human form. The DIY Dwarves I think are a great idea. Chub is a little concerned about whether people can be persuaded to 'stick figures together,' but these fit together so painlessly that I don't think he needs to worry on that score. Another feature that I like about the dwarves is that to me they seem the correct size; I've seen more than enough 6'4" dwarves!

The female figures are nicely proportioned (I've always had a weakness for female figures) and the Greek style hero seems a must for Runequest. The "Legion Of The Damned" range of undead warriors are a particularly evil looking bunch, but just one bone to pick (pardon the pun), they seem a little too well fed for skeletons. Then again, who am I to question what dire magic must keep them animated.

All in all, they look like a very tasty range of figures, and I wish Denizen well for the future - Oh, my regards to the cat!

Next issue, Dixon Miniatures will display some of their Oriental talents...

UP FRONT:

Denizen's DIY dwarves have prompted me to take a closer look at what is for many people a rather "sticky" problem. I refer to the assembly of multi-part figures, i.e. those with separate heads, wings, or weapons.

STEP 1: Try the parts to be joined to ensure that they fit, trimming where necessary with a sharp modelling knife. If they fit correctly, score the surfaces to be glued with your knife. This ensures that the glue will have something to key onto and will not come away once dry. For a stronger joint, the pieces should be 'pinned' together. For example, when fixing a head onto a body, both pieces should be drilled using a very fine drill (pin drill or pin vices are available from DIY shops for a few pounds). A small length hacksawed from a pin should be glued into the hole of the head. When set, push this protruding pin into the hole drilled in the neck and ensure a snug fit. If the pin is too long, it must be trimmed, or the hole drilled deeper. Apply glue to both the hole and the pin to make a very strong joint.

STEP 2: On a piece of stiff cardboard, old tin or matchbox, mix the glue thoroughly with a matchstick (not the live end), pin or similar and leave to stand for a couple of minutes. There is no need to apply the glue until it begins to go tacky. Then, apply the glue to both surfaces and press the pieces together. Do not use too much glue, as this will simply be squeezed out between the pieces and make a mess. It will also obliterate the detail of the figure.

STEP 3: The two parts need to be held in contact while the glue dries. This can often be done with elastic bands, or by pressing the pieces into plasticene or blue-tack, but sometimes thumbs and fingers will have to do the job. Of course, you run the risk of the dreaded CRAMP ATTACK, but one sometimes has to suffer for one's art!

STEP 4: Once the glue is completely set, any excess should be trimmed off with your trusty (not rusty) knife, or filed down.

BACK TO FRONT:

Mr. J. B. Hill of Newton, Derbyshire has sent us a painting tip which I am itching to try for myself:

"UHU STRONG BOND is transparent. This fact can be used to advantage as follows: Take a decent skeleton or ghost figure and paint it up - bones white, eye sockets red with areas of yellow fat, and red blood vessels (I first read this over a plate of spaghetti, thank you Mr. Hill - M.T.). Let it dry, then cover it with UHU strong bond. When this has dried, paint a few more red veins on the surface and then varnish. You have a really good 3-D transparent man, Cthulhu Proto-Shoggoth, Sci-Fi figure or a Lankhmar style Ghoul."

Wargames: We received a number of enquiries regarding preparing the wargames table, bases, accessories and buildings for fantasy battles. The best thing for us to do would be to devote some articles to this in later issues, as this is a large subject to cover. If anybody has any special questions (or tips!) on this subject, please let us know. Who knows, if the Editor is in a nice mood, he might give us space for a special feature magazine on the subject...

Don't forget to mark any letters to this department "BACK TO FRONT," Adventurer, Mersey Leisure Publishing, 85 Victoria Street, Liverpool.

DENIZEN MINIATURES

These photographs, taken by our liche with the lens, Antony Ward, show a selection of Denizen Miniatures' fantasy castings. Painted by Martyn Tetlow, the above shot shows the figures FA29 and FA2 in dramatic pose against a scenic background (used without permission, sorry messrs. Hildebrandt). Bases are hidden by green modelling flock, as they do tend to spoil the effect.

The photographs below show several Denizen figures without the distraction of their background, to illustrate the clarity of the models themselves.

FIGURES IN FOCUS

A look through the lens of Antony Ward

Photographing your miniatures is one way of showing off your talents without carrying a whole box-full of figures around with you. However, the photograph that you take must do justice to your ability. Antony Ward takes us (gently) through the world of miniatures photography:

Introduction. To achieve the desired effect from your photographs, you will need the right equipment. The best camera for the job would be a 35mm camera with a close-up lens. When you buy your camera, the shop will supply you with a 50mm lens, but if you buy the camera body and ask for a 55mm MACRO LENS, it will do the job of a 50mm plus close-up work for only a few pounds more. A tripod is recommended, because the camera needs to be very steady to produce a crisp, clear shot. Failing this, the camera should be secured on a table or something of similar height. Automatic shutter release would be helpful, either a delayed timer button or cable release. This is to make sure that the camera doesn't wobble.

Other useful equipment would be tripods for the lighting, to maintain a steady and constant light source. Failing that, outdoor lighting may be okay (on a clear day!), but you have little control over it then. Background scenery and modelling aids will also be required, and a steady, spacious table on which to lay it all, preferably one that won't be disturbed for mealtimes, etc.

1. Positioning. Positioning depends upon the figure you have selected to photograph. If a giant, you might choose to photograph him from the base, perhaps with a photograph of the sky as background, to really emphasise his height. A dwarf would require different treatment altogether.

Another consideration when positioning your miniature is that of painted detail. If you have spent 6 weeks painting the shield on your character's shoulder, you would want it to show up on the photograph, and would shoot from a slight angle, from above shoulder level.

2. Lighting. To get the best results from your photography, you will need to know a little about lighting. Relying on a flash gun is probably not the best way of doing things, as you don't really know what part of the figure is lit, or where the shadows will fall (possibly hiding much of the detail which you painstakingly painted). It is far better, if you have the resources, to light the figure before taking the shot, using two tungsten lights or similar, one from each side to avoid casting strong shadows. If not, then try and visualise (using a torch or spotlight) where the shadow from your flash will fall. Unless you have a tripod and clamp, you may need an extra pair of hands to shine the light at the figure while you look through the viewfinder. This will let you see if the face is lit up, if he casts a strong shadow on the background or if his sword casts a deep shadow across his face, etc. The use of two lights is helpful, as one may be lowered to shine up at the figure's face, whilst another can light him from above to cut down on any shadows.

Lighting can be modified to give your photographs "mood". A red flash filter or red acetate sheet held in front of the flash would cast a red glow over the whole scene, particularly useful if the model or background shows a fire scene (Fig. 5).

3. Background scenery and props. Background may vary depending on what you want to show in your photograph. If you wish to show off your painting expertise, you might wish to show your figure against a plain, light coloured background. This would emphasise the model's shape, colouring and detail. If, however, you wanted to create a 'mood' or atmosphere, then a black background with heavy shadows could do this. Background scenery, e.g. rocks, twigs, shells and other 'props', will also give an 'atmosphere' to your photograph, and should be chosen appropriately. For example, an elf drawing a bow, could be photographed with a woodland scenery (Figure 1). Figures 6, 7 and 8 show the same figure with 3 different backgrounds, each of which suits the figure, but suggests something different about it.

4. Subject. The subject of your photography may vary from a single figure to a group shot or diorama. Single figures are the easiest, allowing for a close-up shot to highlight the detail of the model or painting technique. Figure 4 shows a 90mm. barbarian, his face well-lit and with all the detail as crisp as the real model. A group shot of 3 figures or so will make each figure appear smaller, possibly with a loss of detail. Fig. 9 shows 3 small figures in combat with a Hunting

Horror. It is a balanced 'action shot' that doesn't emphasise any particular figure. Although the guy with the mace is slightly out of focus, we printed this to show you that problems do arise, especially with tricky shots like this one. Large groups of figures, or large dioramas, suffer from lighting problems, proximity to the camera (the front one may appear a lot larger than those at the back), depth of field (the "in focus" range of the camera) and the possibility of 'cluttering' the shot with too many figures. It is immensely difficult to create "action shots" with more than 5 or 6 figures, without special equipment. If this were required, I would suggest paying attention to a small proportion of the figures (the front ones, for example). Those at the back could be within view, but perhaps not as well-lit, or slightly out of focus.

5. Special Effects. Fig. 3 shows the 90mm. barbarian superimposed beneath the wing of the 25mm. Hunting Horror. This type of photography requires a camera that allows dual exposures on one frame, although a similar, though not as convincing, shot could have been achieved by photographing the giant barbarian and using that as a background to photograph the Hunting Horror. Other special effects can be achieved, such as superimposing a photograph of yourself doing battle with a mighty Balrog, or photographing a wizard with real sparks shooting from his fingers. Special filters can be bought for 35mm cameras which really open up the art of photography and allow you to expand your horizons from merely painting a figure, to producing a work of art.

If, like Alice, you wish to journey through the looking glass, I suggest you take heart from my photography. At first, they were awful, but with practice, decent results are quickly achieved.

CAPITOL

BRITAIN'S MOST ADVANCED COMPUTER MODERATED PLAY BY MAIL GAME... AN EXCITING NEW GAME

Capitol Features -

- A strategic space warfare game, completely computer moderated.
- Approximately 35 players per game.
- Players design their own race's characteristics and description.
- Construct bases on your planets for protection and production.
- Design your own starships and build them at your star bases.
- Expand your empire and conquer other races.
- An 'advanced stage' of the game introduces new technologies of stargates and improved ship movement capabilities.
- Capitol's simplified order formats are easy to remember. No coding your orders onto computer cards or other gimmicks.
- Capitol has an easy to understand rulebook, complete with numerous examples.
- Capitol was subjected to the largest playtest of ANY commercial PBM game. Over 100 players played over 1500 turns of Capitol prior to release.
- Runs on an IBM PC, using 512K.

"Capitol is fast becoming the standard against which other space warfare games are compared."

- With each rulebook you receive a set of overlays to use in mapping the game and moving ships.
- Mapping Capitol is extremely interesting, using the computer printed maps you receive with your turn results.
- No due dates. Capitol allows you four turns per month. Most other computer moderated games have the usual one turn every two weeks.

KJC Games has been running Play By Mail games for about five years now and our reputation for giving good, exciting games and a first class service is second to none. Our team of professional Gamesmasters will usually reply to your turn within 48 hours.

Readers in North America should write to Adventures By Mail, PO Box 436, Cohoes, NY 12047, for information on Capitol.

EARTH WOOD

25 players compete to be the ultimate ruler by controlling all the developed cities, either singularly or with an alliance. A typical game will last about 18 months, with the first knockouts usually starting after six months. Each player is either a king of a fantasy race or a powerful charismatic character. You can recruit trolls, wildmen and control powerful creatures such as dragons. Your characters will capture and control cities, upon which you can spend gold to improve security, workshop production, defences, and maintain and enlarge your army. With gold, your wizards undertake magical research. Spies search out enemy strongholds and then attempt acts of sabotage, theft and assassination. These are just a few options available to a player in Earthwood. Earthwood is computer moderated but the turn sheets and replies are written in plain English. No need to look through complex charts and code books to understand this game.

CRAZIMORR'S WORLD

Europe's most popular Play By Mail game - the fantasy campaign game with over 1,000 player parties already participating. To enter, send £6.00 for rules, setup, first three turns and copy of latest newsletter. Further turns £1.75 each.

TALES FROM THE CRYPT

The latest meeting of the players' superhero team is about to come to a close when the heroes are interrupted by the sound of flapping wings. Suddenly a winged figure crashes into a nearby window. The strange intruder is in no condition to do battle with the players. His wounds are extensive. He staggers toward the heroes, pleading for help, before collapsing to the floor.

When the winged stranger awakens (whether this is in the players' headquarters or a hospital is up to the Gamemaster and the actions of the heroes) he will attempt to explain himself.

"My name is Raven", he begins, "I am a member of the Crimson Guard. We are Canadian heroes. You must help me." Raven coughs and winces at the pain of fractured ribs, multiple abrasions, and simple exhaustion. "My teammates are gone, perhaps dead. Listen to my tale for it is on your good nature that I depend."

Raven briefs the players. First he explains to them about the Crimson Guard. They are a new-formed group based in northern Manitoba. Their leader goes by the name Seeker, a former RCMP, explorer and adventurer. He brought together the other members; Dynamo, a living electrode and wife to Seeker, Chat Noir, a French-Canadian mutant with cat-like abilities. Klondike, a hulk from the far north; and Raven, a winged Blackfoot Indian. Raven does not go into much detail here as he is in pain and his thoughts are burdened by concern for his teammates. Quickly he describes the events of the last few days.

The Crimson Guard answered a call to aid a nearby copper mine. Several shafts collapsed and dozens of miners were trapped. But when the heroes reached that area of the mine, they were attacked by a huge earth monster. Caught by surprise and being a somewhat inexperienced team, the Crimson Guard was quickly overcome by the brute and the rubble it brought crashing down on them. Raven was knocked back from the group and separated by fallen debris. By the time he came to and pulled away the rubble, the creature and the remaining members of the Crimson Guard were gone. In addition, there was no trace of any trapped miners.

Raven, having heard of the players' superhero team, flew off into the night in search of their help. He arrived on the verge of collapse after his flight over hundreds of miles.

The players may question Raven but he is in no condition to give lengthy explanations. If the heroes have decided to help him, Raven will give the players the location of the mine. His information about the monster in the mine is limited. Everything happened so fast and it was dark. The creature was clay-like and bipedal. Its torso and arms were thick and powerful.

At this point, the most probable course for the players to take is to investigate the mine. The GM should make it known that there are virtually no other leads. Raven is not well enough to go with the heroes. If the players have some way of healing Raven then they should be allowed to so. The GM or one of the players will have to control the character.

If the heroes have absolutely no means of getting to northern Manitoba short of hitching a ride, alter the adventure. Explain that Raven used the Crimson Guard's Quadjet to reach the players. The jet is conveniently parked outside the heroes' headquarters. It seats up to seven and has just enough fuel to return to Canada. The Quadjet has no weapons and has a top speed of 700 mph. Remember, the jet should only be available if it is absolutely necessary. Raven's condition upon reaching the players will be the same whether he used the jet or not.

JOURNEY TO THE CITY OF THE EARTH

The Granville Copper Mine is located 25 miles northeast of Lynn Lake (a small town near the Manitoba-Saskatchewan border). That's about 1700 miles from San Francisco, New York, or Oklahoma City. The mine is temporarily closed while authorities investigate the cave-in. The heroes will have to get permission to go inside.

Inspector Talbot, the officer in charge of the investigation, will let the players through the police curtain if they manage to convince him. An 'agreeable, interested' result on the Reaction Table (page 27 of the V&V rules) will suffice. Give the players a +2 modifier if they have helped the Canadian government in the past (a +4 if the heroes and the government are actually on bad terms). There are 15 additional policemen at the mine should negotiations result in combat.

Assuming the players get into the mine, the GM will need to consult the map of the Granville Copper Mine. Here is a description of the numbered areas on the map:

1) Office Building:

1-storey with a basement. In the basement are records showing that this mine has an unnaturally high number of accidents. The owners don't find this to be good publicity and haven't and haven't disclosed this to outsiders.

2) Warehouse:

2-storey. This building is half full of tools, heavy machinery, explosives, fuel, and other supplies.

3) Winchhouse:

2-storey. Inside here is a winch for lifting and lowering a cage to the underground transfer station. The winch is motor-driven and the cage has a carrying capacity of 6000 lbs.

4) Transfer Station:

Located at the bottom of the first shaft and at the top of the second, the transfer station has a pulley for emptying one cage into another. A second winch here has a cage with a capacity of 5000 lbs. that is lifted and lowered into the second shaft.

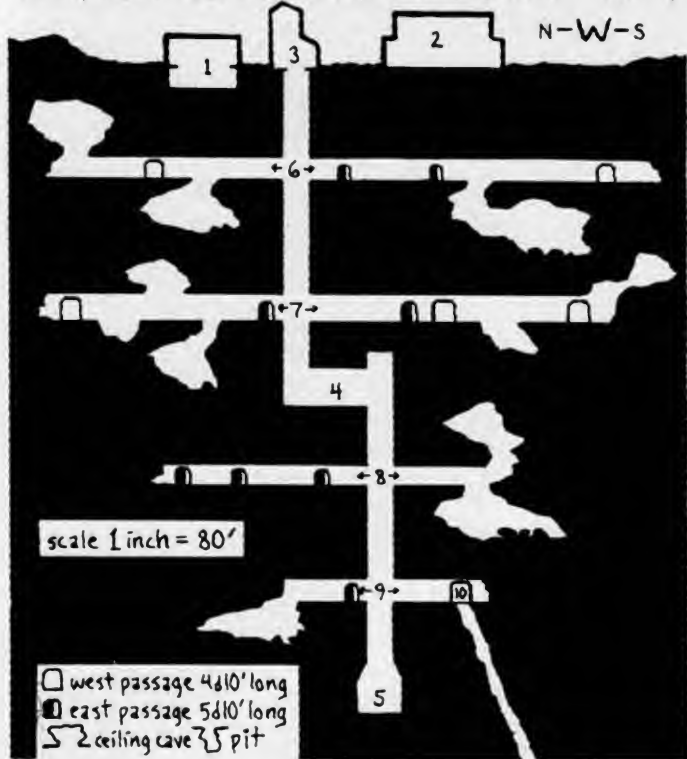

5) Sump:

At the very bottom of the second shaft is a sump. This is a pit to collect seepage water. The water is pumped to the surface through a hose running up the shaft.

6) Level One:

This horizontal passage is the closest to the surface. It is connected to the first shaft. This level, and all others, are supported by timbers, concrete walls, and strong metal rods.

7) Level Two.

8) Level Three.

9) Level Four;

This is the deepest level. it is connected to the second shaft just above the sump.

10) Side-passage;

It is in this side-passage connected to Level 4 that the cave-in occurred. There is rubble everywhere but, assuming the heroes can see down here, they may find an additional corridor branching off from this one. To spot it requires a successful Detect Hidden roll. The passage is behind several rocks weighing 600 to 900 pounds each. If the players can't move the rocks, they will have to hammer away at them with mining tools. The hidden corridor leads downwards at a very steep angle. The players must roll their Agility or less on 1d20 every 20 yards or fall (if the heroes use climbing tools, adjust their Agility score by +4 for this roll only). Damage from falling is 1d4 every 20 yards the character tumbles. The corridor is 100 yards long/deep. When the players reach the end of the hidden corridor they'll be in area 1 of map 2.

Asking around the mine encampment before entering the mine will reveal that the cave-in occurred 'somewhere off the second shaft' (which could be level 3 or 4). Of course, if Raven is there he would know the exact location. While searching the mine, the heroes may find themselves in danger. As the players pass by or explore each level roll percentile dice. At level 1 there is a 5% chance that the earth monster will attack. On level 2 the chance is 15% that the encounter will occur. 30% at level 3 and 60% at level 4.

The earth monster (called Gargantua by its creator) will surprise attack unless the heroes make a successful Detect Danger roll. Gargantua blends in very well with the workings of the mine. It prefers the direct approach, battering all that oppose it. Anytime a blow by Gargantua misses its target, there is a percentage chance equal to half Gargantua's Strength score that rocks will crash down around the combatants. This rule may apply to the characters as well if their Strength scores are 24 or more. falling rocks will do 2d8 points of damage to each combatant that fails to avoid them. The rocks can be avoided if the players roll under their Agility score on 1d20. The person causing the rocks to fall has a +2 to their Agility for this roll only.

Gargantua will not retreat. If the earth beast defeats the players, it will take the ones that are still alive back to its creator.

The following are details on the areas numbered on map 2:

1) Cavern;

This cavern connects this map with the Granville Copper Mine map. A steep upwards passage leads to level 4 at the mine. This is the first area on the map that the heroes should enter. If they have not encountered Gargantua yet, they will in this cavern. Combat with the earth monster will be as described earlier except that missed blows have a smaller chance (one-third of the attackers Strength score as a percentage chance) of causing rocks to fall.

2) Farm;

This is an underground farm where enslaved humans toil over rough, rocky gardens of tubers, roots, and squash. There are about 60 men and a handful of women here. They have crude tools and a low moral (-3 on moral check). The workers are supervised by three Slavers. They are Fraak, Nanog, and Thogh. The Slavers are cruel and sadistic, often inflicting indignities on the human workers such as forcing them to lick their boots.

3) Pit;

The pit is an open mine at which about 40 enslaved men work. With primitive equipment they hammer away at the slopes of the pit, collecting ore for processing in area 4. A track with three mine cars is used for transporting mined rock to the smelter. The men are low in morale, like the farmers, and are watched by three evil Slavers. They are Bundh, Gronk and Sneer.

4) Smelter;

The smelter gleans metals and building material from the rock mined in the pit. 12 captive men work the crude machinery. they are watched by two Slavers, Durge and Ulgor. A track runs from the smelter to area 3.

EMPIRE BENEATH THE EARTH

Note that the Slavers will waste no time in attacking any heroes that arrive on the scene. They would prefer to capture rather than kill the players but they are not concerned with the condition they're in. Captured characters will be taken to area 6.

5) Palace;

Here stands a royal house of old Rome, or so it would appear. The palace with its many arches, domes, and trusses looks to be a place out of another time. Surrounded by pillars and columns with vast interior spaces, the palace is an appropriate residence for empress Terra Tyrannia. The Empress' slaves have worked for years creating her underground empire. The house has luxurious public and private chambers, a large bath, treasure room, and servant's quarters. The empress Terra Tyrannia is waited upon by four male slaves and two females. Her bodyguards, the Praetorian Guard, also live here.

6) Arena;

This is a Roman colosseum. It is lined by stone steps and balconies. The centre is a floor of soft dirt. If the heroes are captured, this is where they will be brought to await Empress Tyrannia's judgement. Her judgement, of course, will be trial by combat. The players must face her Praetorian Guard. See map 3: The Arena.

7) Maze;

Dozens of tunnels inter-connect, doubleback, spiral, and, for the most part, dead end in this area. One tunnel does wind its way through the maze to the surface. Only the Empress knows this route well. Though she has led her Slavers this way several times before, they do not have the intellect to remember the path alone. Any heroes attempting to get through the maze must make 4 successful Detect Hidden rolls. Each roll that fails cost the heroes 30 minutes of wasted time.

BATTLING THE PRAETORIAN GUARD

The Praetorian Guard is actually the Canadian superhero team, the Crimson Guard. They are under the control of the Empress. Each Guard member is dressed as a Roman centurion. Included on the costumes are collars that induce Mind Control. This Mind Control does not act as fatigue on member is equipped and how they may resist the Mind Control:

THE ARENA

Combat in the arena is to the Praetorian Guard's advantage. There are hidden pits (Detect Hidden x2 to spot) that they know the locations of. The pits are 12 game inches deep and have a 40% chance of being spiked (+3d10 damage). Spare weapons are stashed all over the place. From her seat in the balcony, the Empress can activate a 66 PR Force Field that protects her booth and seals the top of the arena, preventing flying characters from escaping. The Force Field is invisible. The Empress has an identical one around the throne in her palace.

Empress Terra Tyrannia's idea of trial by combat is more for sport than anything. She will watch from a high balcony as the heroes battle her Guardsmen.

Name:	Armor:	Weapons:	Situations for Intelligence Saves:
Seeker	ADR 55	Spear, Sword, Dagger, Retarious (weighted net X2 to hit, HTH X1 damage, special attack entangles target)	Dynamo loses over half her Hits, Slave is killed, Hero is incapacitated, He is ordered to kill or has accidentally killed someone.
Chat Noir	ADR 40	none	none (due to Low Self-Control)
Dynamo	ADR 55	Sword, Dagger	Seeker loses over half his hits. She is ordered to kill or has accidentally killed someone.
Klondike	ADR 30	none	Anyone on the Guard loses over half his Hits, Slave is killed, Hero is incapacitated, He is ordered to kill or has accidentally killed someone.

the wearer because it also causes limited amnesia. If the collar-wearer fails any Intelligence saving throw allowed for immoral actions, he'll take 2d4 damage from mental shock for resisting the control. The heroes can determine the source of the Mind Control by rolling their Intelligence or less on percentile dice or by spending an inventing point (the collars are not obvious because they look like part of the centurion outfit). The collars have a structural rating of 9.

The Praetorian Guard will engage the heroes when they have been brought to the arena, have entered the palace, or freed all the slaves. They will try to take the fight to the arena, either by challenging the players to combat there or just running to that location. If the heroes are in the arena, the Empress will enter her balcony from the stairs. The leader of the Guard is still Seeker. He will give orders to the others and try to watch everyone's back. Chat Noir will use Evasion while in combat and then make Special Attacks at his opponent's eyes, head, etc. Klondike uses his strength to assist the rest of the team. He'll hurl dangerous opponents away from his teammates, hold them for other Guard members to hit, and so on. Dynamo may bounce a lightning blast off Klondike into one of the heroes. She must roll half her Agility or less to aim the shot, but gets a +4 to hit and +4 damage for surprising the target. This bonus may only be used once. Dynamo can use her lightning as a carrier attack for her sword. This small chart shows how each Guard

If the heroes overwhelm her Praetorian Guard with ease, she'll make a hasty retreat to the surface through the maze of tunnels. If the fight is a close one she'll try to finish the players herself. Either way, the Empress will use any remaining Slavers as a buffer between herself and the heroes. Should the heroes lose to the Praetorian Guard or the Empress herself, they will wear the collars of obedience as well. Should that happen, the players might start thinking about what their next characters will be like.

IN CONCLUSION...

Ideally, the heroes bring an end to Tyrannia's cruel empire, freeing the slaves and returning the Crimson Guard to normal. The empress may escape and try to create a new power base somewhere. She may even take a Crimson Guard member with her if she still has control over any at the moment of her retreat. Her knowledge of both sorcery and science, courtesy of all the teachers she has enslaved over the years, leaves her with great personal resources.

If the Crimson Guard regains their own freewill, they will insist that the stolen goods which fill Tyrannia's palace be handed over to the Canadian National Treasury (a deed which may or may not give some reward to the heroes, GM's discretion). The Crimson Guard know when they owe a favour and they will offer their services should the heroes ever need them.

EMPRESS TERRA TYRANNIA

Origin and Background: Constantia Galla grew up in a village outside Rome. Near her home there were a number of underground caverns. Constantia loved exploring and relaxing in those cool chambers. She made them a temple to Terra, the Roman goddess of the Earth, and fervently worshipped there. One morning a stony, rock-faced giantess approached Constantia in the caves. The giantess was a personification of Terra. Terra broke open her craggy hide and ordered Constantia to drink of her boiling blood. Constantia did and in doing so was imbued with supernatural abilities. Terra then sent the child to Rome to overthrow their decadent leader. Constantia nearly did but as legions of Roman soldiers swarmed the palace, she fled for her power was running low and she was afraid. When she returned home, she found every one of her living relatives had been turned to sand. Terra had punished her for her failure. Constantia's prayers could not bring the goddess back. Embittered, Constantia left her homeland. She travelled around the world, learning the secrets of scholars and wizards, in hopes she would gain the power that had almost been hers.

Centuries later, Constantia who now called herself Terra Tyrannia, acquired the goblin-like Slavers from a medieval wizard. Over the last 200 years, with the Slavers in her service, Terra Tyrannia became Empress of her own underground empire.

Combat Tactics: Terra refrains from direct combat, preferring to let her Slavers battle for her. If engaged she will hurl stones, blind targets with sand, slow them in mud and so on.

Personality: Terra is power-hungry but her long life has taught her patience. Due to the nature of her powers, she feels entitled to ruling the planet some day.

Identity: Constantia Galla. Sex: Female. Age: 1750+. Side: Evil. Level: 10. Training: Scientific Theory.

Powers:

1) Mutant Powers: earth powers; Terra can manipulate stone, dirt, sand, mud, etc. much in the same way a player with Magnetic Powers can manipulate metal "Earth capacity" is Strength x 100 lbs. per level (Terra has a capacity of 10,000 lbs). Use Chemical Power for a defence. Terra can control sand or dirt to create darkness or attack as HTH with rocks (use weight and velocity to determine damage). PR=5, Range=10 inches.

2) Transmutation: alter the earth so as to make stone become sand, mud become rocks, or any other similar alteration. Roll 2d8 to determine how many cubic feet are altered. Pr=8, Range=44 inches.

3) Body Power: Terra began aging extremely slowly after puberty. She ages 1 year for each century that passes. Terra is immune to disease and her endurance has been doubled.

4) Heightened Charisma A: +16.

Klondike's spacecraft crashed above the arctic circle several years ago. Although Klondike survived the crash, he suffered severe memory loss. As fate would have it, Seeker saw the ship crash. He found Klondike resting on a nearby ice-flow. When they returned to the crash site, the spacecraft's self-destruct sequence engaged and the ship disintegrated. Seeker befriended the Massive, golden-skinned stranger and agreed to help him adjust to his new home. Seeker named him Klondike.

GARGANTUA

Origin and Background: Lawrence Bergren was a drifter who was captured on one of the Slaver raids. During his capture, the Slavers were spotted by several people in a passing motorhome. The RV and its passengers were destroyed before they could get away. The incident prompted Empress Tyrannia to find a more low profile way of collecting slaves. With the aid of rare alchemical solutions, Terra transformed Bergren into Gargantua. Gargantua would be her means of snatching miners from mines in the surrounding area.

Combat Tactics: Gargantua will use natural cover to gain surprise, and then begin pummeling away.

Personality: Bergren's mind has been stripped away by the transformation. He is, however, unswervingly loyal to the Empress.

Identity: Lawrence Bergren. Sex: Male. Age: 29. Side: Evil, Empress Tyrannia. Level: 7. Training: Accuracy in HTH.

Powers:

- 1) Heightened Strength B: +18.
 - 2) Heightened Strength B: +23.
 - 3) Invisibility: In a natural earth environment Gargantua blends in as if invisible. No PR cost.
 - 4) Invulnerability: 20 pts.
 - 5) Life Support: Clay-like body does not need air and survives well in all environments except heat (not a defence against flame powers).
 - 6) Size Change: Permanent: x2 Height Factor, x8 Weight Factor.

DYNAMO

Janice's mother, an inmate at the Safe Haven Mental Institute in Ontario, was injected with unstable chemicals while pregnant with Janice. The experiment was illegal but no-one was ever prosecuted. On the night that Janice's mother went into labour, lightning from a terrible storm struck the delivery room. The doctor in charge of the experiment, nurses and Janice's mother were all killed. Miraculously, newly born Janice survived until firemen and paramedics arrived. Safe Haven burned to the ground that night.

Janice was given the last name Jones by the government and raised in orphanages. As she grew, she learned of her electrical powers, but kept them secret. She ran away at the age of 16. In the dark alleys of Toronto,

Alex Bowan found her. He befriended her, unaware of her special powers. When Janice confided her superpowers to Alex, now Seeker of the Crimson Guard, he convinced her to join the team a Dynamo. She recently married Seeker.

Identity: Janice Bowan. Sex: Female. Age: 23. Side: Good. Level: 3. Training: Endurance.

Powers:

- 1) Lightning control: this power must be channeled through a metal object. Damage: 2d8, Range 24 ins., PR=4.
- 2) Absorption: this power absorbs 100 volts/4 pts. damage of electricity per level (300 volts/12 damage for Dynamo). Absorbed electricity does no damage and every 25 volts/4 damage adds 1 to her power (not to exceed her total). No PR cost.
- 3) Armor, Type B: ADR 90, metal battle suit that allows Dynamo to 'channel' her lightning control. As a Praetorian Guard, she will have a centurion armour instead.
- 4) Heightened Agility B: +17

RAVEN

To the people of the Blackfoot Indian reservation where Joseph Ravenfeather grew up, he was a symbol of their ancient Indian spirits. Unfortunately, Joseph had little faith in ancient spirits. Ravenfeather would argue repeatedly with the elders of the tribe that his mutation was genetic not mystic. One night, after a particularly heated debate, Joseph threatened to leave the reservation. Later, a group of young tribesmen ambushed him with orders to clip his pinfeathers. Without them, he could not fly. Ravenfeather fought madly and escaped before they could 'cripple' him. He knew he could no longer stay with people to whom he was nothing more than a symbol. Joseph flew to Manitoba to join the Crimson Guard as Raven.

Identity: Joseph Ravenfeather. Sex: Male. Age: 24. Side: Good. Level: 3. Training: Intelligence.

SLAVERS

Origin and Background: The Slavers are fiendish creatures of dark magic. The Empress collected them from a wizard when they were mere infants. She trained them and gave them a limited education. They can speak a little English.

Combat Tactics: Slavers will attack with Power Blasts from the air before moving in to kill or capture. They rely on their Slavers whips to capture opponents. They are not opposed to kicking an unconscious foe.

Personality: Slavers are nasty, obnoxious, sadistic creatures. However, they treat the Empress with complete respect and, believe it or not, adoration they would show for their mother.

Sex: Male. Age: 800+. Side: Evil. Empress Tyrannia.

Powers:

- 1) Armor, Type B: ADR 50.
- 2) Special Weapon, Battle-Staff: built-in Power Blast, 2d8 damage, Range=20in, 12 charges. As a HTH weapon, +1 to hit, HTH +1d6 damage.
- 3) Special Weapon, Slaver Whip: +2 to hit, HTH +1d2 damage, Range=3in. Paralysis Ray carrier attack (no range) has +2 to hit, 3 charges.
- 4) Vehicle, Grav Sled: wt. 400 lbs, passengers 1+2, cargo 400 lbs, speed 100mph (air only), structure rating 9, hits/disable 4, hits/demolish 10. Can be operated with 1 hand, has very few vital parts so hits/disable has been doubled, flies at a maximum altitude of 12 game inches, has a battery life of 4 hours.
- 5) Body Power: Slavers are faerie folk. They age 1 year for every 25 that go by. They also have +5 Endurance.
- 6) Heightened Strength B: +9.
- 7) Heightened Sense: Night Vision, can see in the dark as if it were daylight.

Weakness: Vulnerable to Light attacks. Slavers are blinded by light with only one roll needed to hit. Saves to recover from blindness are always 5%. Slavers take +6 damage from light blasts.

SEEKER

Alex Bowan grew up in the rugged Yukon Territory, where he learned to hunt and trap. Financial commitments placed on him by an ailing mother forced Alex to join the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Alex excelled and rose quickly in the ranks of the RCMP. Shortly after his mother died, he left the RCMP to return home. With both parents gone (Dad died in a hunting accident when Alex was 10), home didn't feel the same.

Alex became a wanderer and explorer, living by the hunt. On his travels, he met Kondike. Together they formed the core of the Crimson Guard. He chose the name Seeker after his remarkable tracking prowess. He recently wed Dynamo.

In combat, Seeker uses a variety of weapons. A typical selection would be a crossbow, hatchet, and noose (+1 to hit, HTH +1 damage, roll special attack to entangle target).

Identity: Alex Bowan. Sex: Male. Age: 30. Side: Good. Level: 5. Training: Intelligence.

Powers:

- 1) Heightened Agility A: +11.
- 2) Heightened Charisma A: +5.

CHAT NOIR

Georges LaFontaine was named Chat Noir (Black Cat) by his father, Sir Hillary LaFontaine. His father didn't want to risk his position in society and the parliament, and so sent baby Georges and his young mother away.

The problem with Georges, or Chat Noir, was his appearance. He was covered in Black fur with cat-like eyes and sharp teeth. Chat Noir and his mother were taken to a large, isolated Nova Scotian estate. Eventually, Chat Noir grew restless and ventured into the nearest town. The townspeople cornered Georges and beat him. He used his Emotion Control to escape.

His mother, long held in suspicion by the locals, was forced from the area. Chat Noir bade her farewell and entered the forests where he survived alone for years until Seeker and Klondike found him. They convinced Chat Noir to join them.

In combat, Chat Noir slashes with his claws at faces, groins, and so forth. He gains pleasure out of fighting. Seeker figures that having Chat Noir on the team is the best way to keep control of him.

Identity: Georges LaFontaine. Sex: Male. Age: 19. Side: Neutral. Level: 3. Training: Damage in HTH.

Powers:

LIVE BY THE SWORD

READER'S LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I find it difficult to believe how many letters have arrived at my desk since the launch of ADVENTURER 1! Many offer praise, advice, offers to contribute, subscriptions, money (!), and of course, criticism. The major bee in everyone's bonnet is the quality of the paper. I hope we have made it up to you by this issue (note the superior quality?) In fact, issue #1 was not printed on inferior paper in an attempt to penny pinch. It was a classic, official 'clerical error' (why don't you just say 'cock-up'?).

MR. MCGRAW: First and foremost, I applaud what you're trying to do with ADVENTURER. We need another professional gaming magazine of this type.

(Mr. McGraw goes on to summarise the articles contained in issue #1):

The prospect of grunting schizophrenic role-players presumably worrying about blood loss and the fact that they don't fit the statistical norm in the opinion poll brings tears to my eyes.

Most readers who offered criticism tended to level it at the articles (the scenarios seem to be highly praised, particularly the 3D view of Bealings House), and the cartoon, ie. Once Bitten.

NEIL GRANT: of Mid-Glam: ONCE BITTEN was undoubtedly the worst cartoon I've ever seen. I'm glad to hear that it's going down to one page next issue. Improve it or get rid of the one major blemish in an otherwise good magazine.

JAMES WALLIS agrees: Once Bitten was hard to follow and ultimately unrewarding. Please to be disposing of. Soonest. (What's with the peculiar accent, James?).

As if by way of reply, OLIVER DICKINSON calls O.B. "A superior comic strip; a main reason for subscribing to ADVENTURER."

Griselda wishes to follow the adventures of Fey the Fiery and she generally gets what she wants."

Personally, I think that Once Bitten is so radically different to other fantasy cartoons that many readers have been a bit stunned by it. No, you're not supposed to quickly flit to that page, read it through once, snigger and then read the rest of the mag. A lot of background work and subtle humour is there. Read it slowly, savouring it as you would a well-written scenario or work of fiction.

Speaking of strange... how about this letter I received from DAVE PALMER.

Erm ... wow ... Dear Sir, no, no ... erm ... Dear Cat, it's Neil the Druid here just saying ... no, erm ... giving off vibes ... that issue 1 of ADVENTURER was erm ... really heavy ... I mean ... just mind staggering ... there I was in my sacred grove eating my lentils when wow! It just appeared ... like ... heavy man ... it just came from nowhere ... wow! I mean, flower-power ... peace ... and ADVENTURER ... Heavy! Oh no! Here comes that horrible dwarf again ... the white one ... he just doesn't dig me ... not like ADVENTURER ... Oh no!!

DAVE MORRIS: are you really not going to publish anything "grossly bigoted"? So we won't see any of those juicy letters page debates over sexism, age-ism or whatever? Don't believe it ...

"I tentatively lifted the librum and cradled it in my hairy orcish arms, for fear that it might have induced boredom and the inevitable sleep that White Dwarf usually brings. Either that or it would turn into a Dragon magazine and rob me of 4 hard-stolen pounds ... But no! I realised its awesome potential."

Can you guess which 'state-of-the-art' games magazine Clive Sherwood is talking about ...?

ANDY BRADBURY: having just rescued a copy of your new magazine from the newsagent's shelf (where it had already become a lone survivor of the initial rush), may I congratulate you on an impressive first issue. I was particularly struck by the subtle shift towards a more mature audience, though without going over the heads of the younger set.

A few comments have come my way concerning age groups, possibly due to the never-ending debates on the subject which other magazines have.

DAVE PERRY: Since the average age of your readership is 21.2 years old, perhaps we can have some decent, mature articles as opposed to the childish things in the other one, whose average reader is about 15 years old.

CLIVE SHERWOOD: Although the centre spread helps writers attempting your competition, I can see few other uses for it. Perhaps the kiddie-winkie (7-14) brigade of role-players may like to blue-tac it to their walls. I'm sorry, isn't it a waste of space?

JAMES WALLIS: The idea of a short story competition does seem a little juvenile for a magazine aimed at "mature gamers" - although that isn't going to stop me from entering!

I think this last point sums up the argument about the age at which ADVENTURER is aimed, ie. anybody who cares to buy it and enjoy it! What difference does it make if you're 15, 19 or 21.2 years old? I don't know about the rest of you, but I still pin posters on my bedroom wall (providing they're of sufficient standard), and I still enjoy thought-provoking competitions, and yes! I am a member of the Dennis The Menace fan club! DING DONG!! (Has anybody seen Gnasher?) Seriously, though, although the content of ADVENTURER is aimed at an older age group, what we are trying to do is present it in such a way that all age groups will appreciate, and more intelligent or experienced younger readers will benefit from.

RICH MUMFORD: Who is this Tristan Knott geezer - never heard of him. His attitudes to D&D strike me as being pretty purile. Fandom is about individuality and to 'be different' but he seems to be a typical stereotype D&D player ... I suppose Tristan's the sort of pratt who prints hardware.

Each to his own, Rich! surely fanzines have to contain what the editor would like to print, and if he's successful, then okay. A case of live and let live, I'd say.

GRAHAM STAPLEHURST: I don't think ADVENTURER is going to break the mould of British rolegaming publications. Despite your editorial claims to be independent, what do you feature in the magazine other than Grenadier/Games of Liverpool adverts? Ian (Marsh) has already explained to me that you are apparently refusing to ask Games Workshop for advertising ... etc ... etc.

To be quite honest, Graham, if Joe's Corner Games Store (inc.) want to advertise in ADVENTURER, they are more than welcome to. Standard rates to all and sundry, don't y'know!

Grovel ... apology ... sorry ... JAMES WALLIS, editor of Sound & Fury was responsible for the WHITE FIRE CoC scenario in issue #1. Even if we did forget your name, James, at least we paid up (We didn't? Oh, I'm sure we will one day!)

Chris Kirk wrote in asking for a larger letters page. presumably, that's so I can mention the kinky black envelope with gold and silver runes he sent in ...

DINO VESSALIO: Only the other day, I went into a newsagent hoping to find some interesting comic books (I'm a collector) when my eye caught the cover of ADVENTURER #1. It was very enjoyable reading and well worth buying. What you say about introducing more people to the hobby is good (me for one!) - keep it up.

ADVENTURER breaks into new territory, eh?

J. HURWTIZ: I recently sent you a letter giving comments on ADVENTURER // 1. I reread it before deleting it from the word processor and I realise that I must have been in a pretty foul mood when I wrote it!

I wish you every success with ADVENTURER and hope it goes from strength to strength.

Yes, we have had a few letters like that.

ALEX BARDY: Oi Stevie! (It's as nice a way to start a letter as any!)

"I solemnly do declare to love, cherish and (yeuch!! -ed.) obey the words spoken forth (Yes, get on with it! -ed.). I seek the pleasure of the label 'Mersey Leisure Lackey.'"

Oh, you want to contribute to ADVENTURER? Okay, subject open: Any reader who wants to submit articles, artwork, poems or anything else and wants to know how to go about it, PLEASE send a stamped SAE to me first. If not, your submission may be filed and never returned, lost in the deeps of the ADVENTURER filing cabinet.

IAN MARSH: For a 1st issue of a newsagent-distributed magazine, I felt that ADVENTURER lacked the necessary impact; (it sold well -ed.) some better articles ... stronger articles would have helped achieve this (but it sold well!) Even an intelligent introduction to role-playing games mightn't have gone amiss: I would think that ADVENTURER, as a new magazine, is quite likely to get a few curious, impulse buyers; something to help them understand the magazine would have gone down well.

If there had been any little pages left over, Ian, I would have included a "play-as-you-learn" scenario for exactly the above reasons. As it was, I decided to try and please the games players, not the few impulse buyers. As it is, I'm sure that anyone not familiar with role-playing games would be able to find out about them through one or other of our advertisers, or direct from ourselves.

STEVE SHERLOCK: I have some comments to make about S. Rawlinson's article on Method Role-Playing. He says that a character should be thought up, imagining how he/she looks, dresses, background and profession, and then the stats should be 'thought up!' Now, come on, S. Rawlinson, that's turning the characters into Batman, Superman and Wonderwoman. After all, who's going to 'think up' a character with low requisites? Surely the idea of role-playing is to play the character that you roll on your dice to the best of his ability.

I think that Mr. Rawlinson was trying to say that you should fit the stats. around the personality to create a realistic, believable character. Instead of rolling a series of numbers and trying to build a character around that.

ANGELA TIMMS: Shop Window is a great idea and very well put over. It is good to get an unbiased review of a game and to know what you get for your money, as I have wasted a lot of money in the past on games with very little content and a very boring game.

We try to be impartial, Angela. Compare the shining review given to Cosmic Encounter this issue to the less-than-enthusiastic treatment of Super-power last issue. Both games, of course, are Games Workshop's concern.

ANGELA TIMMS: This leads me to another point; one way in which we can find out about a game is to hear from someone who plays it. Magazines have the problem of being a little careful what they print, but if you talk to another player they can quite easily say that a game is utter junk without being polite about it. Lets face it, when it comes to wasting money, you really need the truth. There is very little contact between clubs; there may be a little friendly rivalry but not much more. Meetings such as Reading Games Fair and Games Day help to bridge the gap a little. There are so many good ideas, and every DM changes something. Perhaps ADVENTURER could start up some form of club contact, and also put some lonely players in touch with clubs. I am willing to do all that I can if I may be of service.

Angela, do you really know what you would be letting yourself in for? May I suggest that those clubs who would like to start a contact scheme, should refer to the addresses given in our classified column. Angela belongs to the FREEDOM WARRIORS, but please don't snow her under with mail. Urgent and brief messages only please.

J. T. BROWNING: I am glad to see the production of a new fantasy magazine, yet I would like to make a few comments. First of all, you have a tough competitor (?) in White Dwarf. It is more popular, has more pages, a glossier cover, currently better articles, news etc. etc. all in all, better. So come on, you're in business now. You are supposed to be working to become the most popular magazine out (aren't you?), so get going!

Letters like that do nothing for my ego, you know...

IAN SEWELL: ADVENTURER magazine, a triumph for role-playing in this country! Your scenario style is like a breath of fresh air; useable scenarios in any circumstances, with the option of doing something that the players might want to, and not what the scenario dictates.

Now letters like that one, really do things for my ego! Finally, forgive a little back-patting on our part, it isn't every day you get to publish your first magazine. General comments suggest that we have a long way to go before soaring to the dizzy heights that we're aiming for, but with continual support and feedback, I'm confident that we'll be there! Till our next adventure!

STE DILLON.

Many people have written with suggestions and ideas for SYSTEMLESS SCENARIOS. This means a scenario which contains no statistics for NPCs and which is designed for use with any role-playing game. In order to play, the GM must therefore provide his own statistics. This is a useful proposition, because it gives players of 'less popular' games a wider variety of scenarios. However, the biggest argument against this type of scenario is that by providing statistics for a particular game, e.g D&D, the DM can play without having to spend hours rolling up stats. At the same time, players of other systems can usually modify the scenario anyway, especially if they're prepared to put in the required overtime to provide stats.

I don't want to get into a drawn-out debate about this matter, but I would like some feedback from readers, saying whether they like, dislike or have no preference over systemless scenarios.

TWILIGHT: 2000™

For five years, the armies of the world have fought back and forth across Europe. Three years ago the missiles started flying. Most countries were hit hard in the nuclear exchange, but no one had a decisive advantage and the war went on. Tanks began breaking down and the supply of spare parts dwindled to zero. The sophisticated artillery weapons have exhausted their ammo, and no one is capable of producing any more. Divisions which started the war with 20,000 men are lucky to put 2000 into the field. But the war goes on.

You are part of what once was the leading U.S. division of NATO's last drive into central Poland.

There isn't much in the way of organized military forces left on either side, and local warlords, militia, and bands of marauding deserters rule the countryside.

Your division has been over-run and your group is hundreds of kilometers from the nearest friendly. The last message from division HQ read:

GOOD LUCK.

YOU'RE ON YOUR OWN.

FIRE ON HIGH 'Designing a Ritual Magik System for FRP' by Rob Nott

Mithrall inscribed a perfect pentagram across the cold stone floor with silver alloy paint, sealing the points with wax and filling the space with the names of Raphael, Gabriel, Michael, Vitus, Procopius and the lesser Angelic hosts. At each point of the star stood a copper bowl in which the Mage burnt aromatic herbs as proscribed in The Book of Ebon Bindings, designed to weaken the abomination to be summoned. The Wizard himself stood in a circle of protection transcribed with an intricate array of geometric shapes such that any demon assaulting it would have to break through no less than four points in succession. Around his neck hung a silver sign of Syrinx: his last line of defence should things go wrong.

Trembling slightly, Mithrall began to read the broken latin words from the black book, opening the seven gates to Hell one by one and calling forth Aggamon - the horned abomination - to his Sanctum Sanctorum.

A fierce wind blew through the room extinguishing the many candles and almost buffeting Mithrall from his place of protection. From deep in the forest outside the Wizard's home came a deep hollow sighing - the sound of something stirring from it's age old sleep. As the wind grew stronger and stronger Mithrall had to shout his words in order to be heard, commanding the creature to stand before him.

The walls of the building shook to the sound of a legion of unholy things charging head long through the darkling trees and Mithrall grew scared. The oaken double doors to his sanctum exploded inward as a great gout of flame flashed through the hall. At the centre of the pentagram crouched an ebon horned beast surrounded by 101 demonic courtiers of all shapes and sizes. Mithrall saw the floor on which the pentagram had been laid crack open as if struck by an earth tremor. As the Legion of devils tore away pieces of the broken pentagram, Aggamon gazed with hellish eyes at the terrified Mage.

"You will burn!" it hissed between blackened teeth.

Fire sprang in every part of the room charring Mithrall's circle of protection bit by bit. Fearful for his life he began to fumble for the correct ritual of banishment, praying to God that it would work and that it would be in time...

Ever since the first D&D set hit the streets back in the early 70s, Magik has tended to be poorly treated by the majority of commercial Game designers. In most cases little attention has been paid to 'Atmosphere' - systems revolve round pre-packaged 'machine gun' spells that resemble a medieval armoury rather than the magik of myth and legend. With the set of guidelines presented herein, an imaginative GM should be able to devise his own home grown Ritual Magik system and tailor it to whichever set of commercial rules he favours.

I first became interested in this sort of thing after reading a review in an early Acolyte of "Magic - an Occult Primer" by David Conway. Spurred on by the good review I read it cover to cover, and very good it was too - designed to be read by someone with little or no knowledge of the laws of magik. Nowadays I think it is only available in hardback, but if you see a copy going cheap somewhere, it comes well recommended as a good source of background.

A basic understanding of the Laws of Magik help when designing an FRP system. Magik has to have some form of consistency otherwise we are left with an 'anything goes' universe.

The Law of Knowledge: Understanding of a subject brings control.

Law of Infinity: Anything is potentially possible in an infinite universe.

Law of Connectivity: Symbolism is inherent in magik; A magician who makes use of the correct correspondencies will be in a position to exert his influence on the state of reality.

The Law of Names: An off shoot of the above law, True names possess power as they are in effect a personal symbol of the individual concerned. To know a man's true name is to have some measure of control over him.

Law of Opposites: Every subject can be split into two opposing factors and in theory a synthesis of these factors will produce a new concept more powerful than it's individual parts. The Magician believes in the power of a unified whole i.e. the theory that people are comprised of opposites (for example a man has both male and female elements within him, but the male side is dominant (in most cases...)). By this law, a Sorcerer who has learnt to unite both elements within himself gains greater power and understanding.

Law of Perversity: There is never a 100% chance of anything. Random luck will always play a part in magik as with everything else in life. A random element can be reduced through planning, skill and foresight, but it can never be eliminated.

Law of Bounds: Each person lives within his own private universe created and shaped by his own senses. There is no way of telling that what you see as the colour 'blue' is indeed what other people see as 'blue'. All beings are therefore isolated from each other. A Magician who gains an understanding of another persons private universe has gained a broader insight into the nature of subjective reality and since knowledge equates to power (first law) it will advance his skill with the arcane arts.

As a sub-law from this, reality is shaped by the belief of the individual. If a man truly believes something does not exist, then for him it does not (an example being the people who walk across red hot coals without so much as a blister to show for the ordeal - for them the coals do not exist). Similarly the opposite is true (Law of opposites): if a man truly believes in something, then for him it is 'real'. An understanding of someone elses 'universe' allows a Mage to project his own 'reality' and thereby affect that person.

Law of Neutrality: Magik, like everything else in life, is neither good nor evil. Since good and evil are subjective concepts (the definitions of each depend on the individual concerned) a spell might be 'evil' to one person and 'good' to another. It all depends on your viewpoint.

And that, you will be pleased to know, is about as philosophical as we get in this article. Beyond the above, it is not really necessary to have a deep and meaningful insight into the nature of the universe to design a magik system. If that was the case we might as well all give up now.

Astrological Influences: The most important part of any ritual magik system is the table of correspondencies based on the zodiacal star signs and planetary positions. A decision therefore has to be made pretty early on regarding your world's astrological pattern. The easy way out (which I took when I designed my 2112 campaign) is to adopt the familiar Earth Zodiac and planets of our solar system. Should you do this, your work is already finished for you. If not you will have to create variants on the standard patterns i.e. a planet for war, a planet for love etc. Having arranged your planetary bodies a zodiac can be drawn up based on anything from a Tarot pack to some bizarre mythological creation of your own. For simplicities sake I am going to assume a constellation based on our own.

Correspondencies are those elements (plants, colours, numbers, symbols) which relate to planetary spheres of influence. The system of magik I am outlining is based on what is called "Sympathetic magik" - planets have their own spheres of influence i.e. Mars=War, Venus=Love. Ancient religions tended to link their Gods with the heavenly orbs, so the same can easily apply to your chosen campaign pantheon. These spheres of influence represent the natural state of things throughout the multiverse. When a Sorcerer wishes to exert his influence on reality he in effect alters it. To do so he has to affect the spheres of influence and this is where our correspondencies come in.

Think of the correspondencies in terms of invisible 'levers' - they are a direct form of access to the universal power we term magik. The more correspondencies the Mage possesses, the greater his chance of using the planetary spheres and the greater his chance of changing reality - i.e. casting a spell.

In pseudo-magik terms each planetary sphere has it's own 'Mana' charge (Mana being the polynesian term for the building blocks of magical energy) and therefore the elements linked to that particular sphere attract the power necessary to manipulate reality - hence the term "sympathetic magik."

Correspondencies are therefore very important to the casting of a spell. Without them we have a situation similar to opening a locked door without a key. It can be done but it's a lot harder. Although I have mentioned that the planets control spheres of influence, it should not be implied that the planets are in any way sentient - the power is simply a natural force that keeps the universe, as we know it, together.

So you will need to draw up tables for the planets and the zodiacal correspondencies. For the former you will need a matrix to tell you which planet is dominant at any particular hour of the day. The pattern will vary from day to day as each planet governs a period of 24 hours - in our planetary system the links are pretty obvious i.e. Saturn=Saturday, the Sun=Sunday etc. For the latter you will need a table listing all the correspondencies for each sign of the zodiac. The easiest way of constructing your own (a matter of mere minutes) is to pick up a book on astrology from your local library and copy out the relevant bits. Bear in mind that you are designing a game system - 100% accuracy is not required - all you are trying to do is capture the style and atmosphere of the thing.

Once you have finished your charts and tables, how do you convert them to actual game use?

It's quite simple: when the Mage wishes to cast a spell, he consults his astrological tables and finds the star sign most suitable to his needs. An example would be useful at this stage, so let us suppose that our friendly sorcerer (henceforth referred to as Perion for conveniences sake) chooses to cast a spell to make a woman fall in love with him. Consulting his musty tables he finds that Virgo is associated with love and sex and so prepares the necessaries for the ritual. Scurrying about his work room he gathers as many correspondencies as he can find.

The basic nature of the spell is to coerce an individuals will, so we can break it down into a basic pattern of three stages:

I) Perion creates a mystic link with his target, in this case a woman we will refer to as Jeckie.

II) Perion casts the spell itself and attempts to act through the planetary influence of Venus to manipulate Jeckie's feelings towards those of love.

III) Jeckie has a chance to resist Perion's spell.

These three stages fit virtually all forms of magik and can be considered to be universal in application.

1. Establishing the Magik Link: Perion has to make contact magically with Jeckie - creating a sort of astral path down which the magik can flow. If he cannot form the link he cannot cast the spell.

There are several factors to be considered. Does Perion know what Jeckie looks like? Does he know where she is? Does he have any foci to concentrate on? The latter is quite important as it makes a considerable difference to Perion's spell. 'Foci' are items that have been in contact with the target and still possess a personal charge individual to that person alone. Examples would include nail clippings, hair, a ring, a garment, or something that is very dear to the target. The more foci Perion possesses, the easier it will be to form a link. On a similar note, the link will be made easier if Perion is familiar with his target. If he has no idea what she looks like or where she is, it will be harder to visualise her and since magik is very much based on visualisation and concentration, such lack of information will tend to screw things up.

These factors are added up and a percentage improvised, taking also into account the Mage's skill and learning. A quick throw of the dice will determine success or failure to establish the link and the process will expend some Mana as the cost of trying.

('Mana' is simply a flash word for 'power points' which are used in many RPGs. It is one of the many limited factors on spell casting as all attempts use up some of the Magicians stored Mana.)

2. Casting the Spell: Next comes the spell itself. Once again a percentage chance is improvised based on several factors: a) the number of correct correspondencies gathered together, b) the skill of the Mage, c) the difficulty of the spell and d) any special factors to be taken into consideration (such as the spell relating to the Mage's specialist field of study so he gets a bonus in casting it).

The difficulty of the spell is obviously very important as there is quite a difference between creating fire at the end of a branch of wood and causing a volcano to erupt on command. Spells are therefore given difficulty ratings and the higher the rating, the more difficult the chance of casting and the greater the loss of Mana points in trying. Some spells may be so powerful that the Mana required is more than your common or garden Mage has at hand, in which case he will have to work out a cheaper way of creating his desired effect. To compute a difficulty rating for each spell the GM has to have a list of standard categories, for example:

- i) Duration of the spell,
- ii) Damage done by the spell (if any),
- iii) Area of effect,
- iv) Does it break the natural laws of the universe (e.g. gravity?)
- v) Rate of movement involved,
- vi) Does the spell require creation of matter (more difficult than utilising already existing matter).

As more spells are devised, the GM will have more categories to refer to in his check list. For example a spell commanding someone to walk will be easier than a command to commit suicide as the latter goes strongly against the will of the target, while the former does not (and how is the victim to know he's going to walk round a corner and drop into a 20' pit full of vipers...).

Breaking everything down into a numerical system (e.g. Duration: up to 5 minutes: 1 pt, up to 30 minutes: 2pts, up to 2 hours: 3pts, up to 12 hours: 4pts, up to 2 days: 5pts, up to 1 week: 6pts etc, etc) the GM can add up the factors to create one final difficulty rating. This can equate to a percentage chance on a table and a roll of the dice will give success or failure. Personally I like to see a Quality Result system as in the James Bond 007 role-playing game, so that you can have four grades of success in addition to failure - it gives the GM some indication as to how good the spell really was. For those not familiar with the 007 game, a Quality 1 result is the best possible, while a quality 4 is the worst. A Q1 is represented by 10% of the base chance of success, a Q2 by a further 10%, Q3 by 30% and Q4 by the remaining 50%. e.g. if the Mage had a 60% chance of success, the breakdown would read as follows:

01-06: Quality 1. 07-12: Quality 2. 13-30: Quality 3. 31-60: Quality 4. 61-95: Failure. 96-98: Automatic failure. 99-100: Critical failure.

As you can see from the above, I tend to rule that 96-98 on percentage dice is a failure regardless of the base chance of success, and that 99-100 is a critical failure (the '100' being more serious than the '99').

Going back to our example of Perion and Jackie, a Q4 result would probably coerce Jackie into liking him, a Q3 into harbouring a secret crush, a Q2 into open love and a Q1 into a "I can't live without you!" syndrome. A failure of course would be a failure, and a critical fumble would probably lead to Jackie actively disliking our hero. Obviously this sort of system leaves a lot up to the GM since it is very much 'rule of thumb', but I feel that an open ended approach such as this is the best way of handling a subject as wide and sprawling as magik.

3. Resisting the Spell: Finally, stage 3 is where Jackie has a chance of resisting the spell, particularly if she is a sorcerer herself, or is anticipating it. This is of course the good ol' saving throw much loved by D&D players everywhere. As with the first two stages it is best described as a percentage die roll, based on the following points:

- a) Mental prowess of the target.
- b) Any magical skill.
- c) Charms of protection.

d) Piety rating (if you are running a campaign where the Church dislikes Sorcery then a very holy individual will have a certain amount of God given protection in return for being faithful).

The saving throw should be evaluated as a quality result as well so that you do not get the case of a Q1 success being wiped out by a Q4 save. Simply degrade the spell roll by a number of placings equal to 5 minus the quality result of the save. For example, if Perion rolled a Q2 and Jackie rolled a Q4, the Q2 would be downgraded one place to a Q3.

Your system should be arranged so that % chance of a saving roll is less than the % chance of spell success, all factors be equal - after all, the poor mage has already had to make 2 die rolls to get this far! Do bear in mind that the target will not always be resisting a spell; an obvious example is a spell of curing. It is up to the individual concerned whether he wishes to fight the magical effect.

As with creating the link the sorcerer should lose Mana for the spell stage. In each case the loss of Mana should be based on the difficulty rating itself. In my 2112 campaign, it was 1/2 the difficulty in Mana points for the link, and all the difficulty for the 2nd stage spell.

I have introduced you to the basic background for creating your own magik system. Next issue, I shall introduce you to special material components necessary for casting specific spells, the side-effects of sorcery, demons and how to handle them, and enchanted items such as talismans.

Kings of Steel

KINGS OF STEEL

In an age of long past, in a time long forgotten, a Great War swept through the land. The powerful yet cruel and decadent Blackstar Empire was under attack.

Each player takes the role of an important leader in the struggle against the imperial legions. As a King or Lord, an Archmage or Sorcerer, you will wield both men and magic in a race to recapture the lands and cities of your forefathers.

KINGS OF STEEL is a fast moving, 14 player, FANTASY wargame played by mail over a period of one year.

A start up package, including extensive rule book, large, detailed map, set - up sheet and numerous power cards, plus the first three turns, can be purchased for £4.

Subsequent turns cost £1.75.

COULD YOU COMMAND A STARSHIP?

The challenge of starship command: out-thinking, out shooting and out-maneuvering your opponent in a warp-speed dogfight! Only your skill and cunning can bring you victory as you face other starships fearsome monsters and unknown aliens.

STAR FLEET BATTLES Vol.II

captures the excitement of individual starship combat in deep space. Each player commands one or more starships, and allocates the energy available, fires the weapons and plots movement.

Hits are scored on "Ship System Displays" (included), which show the layout of the particular starships's weapons and other systems.

Movement and combat are simultaneous, based on pre-plotted instructions by the players. Although the situations vary, the normal objective of the game is to engage and defeat your opponent's starships while minimizing damage to your own starships.

STAR FLEET BATTLES Vol.III

is the starting set for gaming in the STAR FLEET UNIVERSE, including seventeen different scenarios, including solitaire, two player, and multiple player situations. Several scenarios are included for beginning players.

Also included are two campaign games for extended game play.

A variety of ships are featured from the Federation, Klingon Empire, Kzinti Hegemony, Romulan Empire, Gorn Confederation, Tholian Holdfast, and the Orion Pirates fleets.

The Silver Feather of Chazara

The feather is buried deep,
Within the mountains very heart,
Guarded by Zimon's demon,
Who would tear your soul apart.

The valley lies within the mountains,
Holding secrets none should know,
But look ye down into the waters,
And see it's true nature flow.

With those words Chazara vanished, leaving a silver bow in the circle, where he had been standing. Warily I moved towards it and touched it gently with a finger. Somehow I thought that something made by magic would be hot as the flash that had created it, but it was cool to the touch and made of a metal I was not familiar with.

"Pick it up, child, it is your gift. Chazara gives it to help you in your quest."

"Why me father. I do not understand. I know nothing of fighting or legends. It must be a mistake to use me to find the stolen Silver Feather." Tor smiled at his beautiful daughter. She did seem to be an odd choice. Tall and fair but so very delicate, unlike her brother Shem, who was strong as an ox and loved a fight. Yet Shara had her strengths. Never once had Tor seen his daughter flustered. She was always calm, whatever the circumstances. Sometimes he had wished something or someone would excite or confuse her but it never happened. Even this appeared to have only puzzled her. "Chazara has never led us astray Shara, so we must trust in his judgement. He must believe you can succeed where others might fail."

"Why then did he not choose Shem to go with me instead of Lien. I hardly know him. He never speaks to anyone, unless he has to and I'm not even sure he is to be trusted."

"I confess I do not understand any more than you, but Lien is a brave warrior and it is as important to him that Zimon's power grows no greater by stealing Chazara's magic, than it already is. His father's lands are also on the border of Zimon's spreading empire. As for him saying little, that is true but you can trust in the few words he speaks. Now you must rest Shara, you should leave at first light. Shem rides to Lien now to tell him what we have learned."

As dawn broke and the sun crept over the mountains, I walked out into the courtyard. I looked towards Lien, he showed no sign of greeting and gave his attention to the bustle and excitement that surrounded us. I flicked blond tresses from my face and resigned myself to the fact that this person was to be my companion until the Feather was returned. He was handsome. Tall, dark and powerfully

Cover Story Competition

I wonder how many people realise just how difficult it is to judge a competition such as this. Entries came from far and wide, from readers of different age groups; we had serious entries, humorous entries, long ones and short ones. Eventually, with Marie's help, I managed to select the following story by Alex Mellor.

built, but cold and silent. He didn't even smile to acknowledge my presence, so I treated him with indifference and saved my smiles for my family. My father, sensing the atmosphere between us, wished us both good luck and God-speed. Shem complained again at being left behind and asked that Lien take care of me. I was angry that Shem would embarrass me with such talk, and furious with the curt nod which was the only reply Lien could manage. Before anger got the better of me, I bid a hasty farewell and led my mount from the court yard without looking back.

I heard the hoof beats fall into step behind me and knew Lien followed, but I would not acknowledge him. We rode in that fashion until dusk, when the steep mountain path brought us to the entrance of the caves. I would have continued despite my exhaustion, if Lien had not called a halt for the night. I will not give you cause to complain at my delaying you, I thought to myself, as I shared out our rations of meat. It was with that same thought on my mind I fell asleep, with some of my food still uneaten.

I was awakened by a stong hand shaking my shoulder, and opened my eyes in panic, wondering where my maid was. My look of uncertainty was obviously amusing to Lien who stood over me smiling. I felt like slapping his face but remembered we had more important things to worry about.

I ate a quick breakfast, happy to get moving and shake some of the chill from my bones. As we entered the mountain, I realised cold was a feeling I had better become accustomed to. We moved slowly downwards in the darkness of the caves. We had left the horses outside as they would make too much noise on the stones and give away any chance we had of surprise. Lien led the way, holding a reed torch which dimly lit our path. As my bones began to ache at all the walking we had done, Lien stopped dead in front of me and signalled silence. I wondered what was wrong until I head a strange slobbering sound.

Lien extinguished the torch and waited while our eyes adjusted to the darkness. He whispered I was to wait for him but as we had been sent together, I ignored his words and followed him. As we came around a bend a monstrous apparition met our eyes; a huge creature barred our way with long searching tentacles. Lien turned and pushed me back so violently I fell to the floor. The creature wasted no time and immediately wrapped one of its tentacles around him. I watched in horror as he hacked at it with his sword. As he severed one tentacle it was replaced by two more. I heard footsteps behind me and as I scrambled to my feet, to my surprise I saw Shem running towards the monster. The two together made no impression at all and were in danger of losing their lives as more tentacles wrapped around them. It was then I remembered the bow. I was no great shot but I had to try. As I drew back I felt the bow pulse and knew instinctively it would find its mark. As the arrow hit, a curdling scream filled the air and the demon vanished. Shem and Lien fell to the floor with exhaustion. My brother was the first to find his voice and thank me. Lien looked at me with an unreadable expression on his face, "Perhaps Chazara knew what he was doing after all."

Shem began to explain he had been worried about me and had travelled through the night, "although it looks like you can manage without me," he laughed. Lien interrupted us and pointed to a rock which had carvings on it. I hadn't noticed it in all the excitement. Laid upon its top was the Silver Feather on a velvet cloth. Lien put it in a pouch at his waist and was just saying we should make our way back when a loud scuffling sound drifted towards us. I stood frozen as I saw what was making the noise.

"Rats," shouted Shem. "Thousands of them, run!" he grabbed my arm and pulled me down the tunnel, having no idea where it would lead. My legs were beginning to feel like lead and I was just thinking my lungs would burst, when we spotted daylight up ahead. Lien lit some reeds and as we ran out into the fresh air, he dropped them at the entrance. The shock of the flames and the squeals of the early victims stopped the rats in their tracks and we were safe.

We found ourselves on a wooden bridge that led us over water to the top of a canyon. Across the other side was a strange white building and a huge, featureless stone figure.

"Zimon's Temple, I hope he doesn't know we're here," Shem muttered. "How do you know?" I asked. Shem pointed down into the water. The reflection showed the temple as a skull and the figure with eyes. I remembered Chazara's words about the reflection showing the true nature and realised Zimon would be expecting us. At that moment a dark shadow fell upon us, and before we could react, Shem was swept up in the talons of a huge Eagle.

"Use the feather." I screamed at Lien. He looked uncertain but as the bird flew across the water towards the Temple, he took it from his pouch and held it at arms length. "Think flight Lien, think flight." As he did so, he was lifted upwards and he pointed his arms in the direction of the eagle. I aimed the bow and as the first arrow hit the great bird, shuddered. At the second arrow, he dropped Shem, who fell into Lien's waiting arms. Never in my life had I been so relieved. As the two landed, they found me weeping.

Shem was confused by my state, but Lien just smiled. "I think it's time to go home Shara, too much has happened for one day. Come, there's a camel over there." Surprised as I was, I still allowed Lien to take my arm and guide me towards the mount, while Shem, still shaken, followed behind. Lien lifted me up to place me on the camel's back and as he did so, it's form changed into that of smiling Chazara. "Well done you two. I'm sorry Shem caused you such trouble but perhaps he will mind his own business in the future. I think you both found what you were looking for anyway. Shall we go then?" Before we had a chance to even register our amazement, he flicked his hands and the clouds swirled about us. As they dissolved we found ourselves dazed but happy, back in the palace courtyard.

Well done, Alex. £50 worth of your favourite goodies are on their way to you.

J. Taylor: Chelmsford

With tales of gore and blood...

Like lightning, his hand grasped the exposed neck. His fingers tightened around the barman's throat and squeezed! The landlord's face contorted in agony, his eyes bulged as if to explode! Yet still the fingers, like jaws of steel, tightened!

We had references to games...

I was sitting there, watching Bryvillion being dragged into the distance, blood spilling from an open wound like blood from an open wound.

Pythonist (my wife) says it might be useful to have Bryvillion's 5X10⁸ GPs worth of wealth.

D. Read: Peterborough

We even had 'Surreal' Ideas...

Dillon sat cross-legged on the cool grass, munching thoughtfully. He had a lot of time on his hands; he also had it on his legs, elbows and feet. He wondered if the small blue mushrooms really were magic. Out of the corner of his eye, Dillon saw a strange lumpy fellow in a camel-hair coat. Then he realised it was a camel.

B. Brown: Wroughton

As the man said, it takes all sorts...

Our only foreign entry to the competition comes from Alexander Hohmann, a German living in France (?):

Poor Zwyxnyzk! His candour had betrayed him once again. After a difficult journey full of challenges and dangers we had at last arrived at the castle of the great Archmage Dee-Em. Our purpose had been to demand ... erm ... ask him to do us a favour and join our party to seek adventure and push back the boundaries of mankind etc...

But Dee-Em only laughed at us.

So we left, thanking him for having granted us an audience. But in that moment Zwyxnyzk got angry and called him a Dee-Em enraged and pronounced a couple of strange syllables. Our friend was transformed into a camel and vanished, leaving only a stinking cloud behind him.

To find him again we bought all the camels we could buy all over the province and led them to the Lake of Revelation, which reveals the truth of things. We just had to examine the mirror-image of the heard to find our friend.

This we did. Zwyxnyzk was there. I gave him back his human shape with a Wish scroll I had discovered in a dust-bin some days before.

But instead of thanking us, that thankless little scamp only insulted us; he said true friends would have felt his presence in the animal's body and so on ... Amanda and I were up to kill him, but suddenly a sort of giant chicken came to grasp him and save him from our wrath (and for his larder). Amanda immediately took her bow and shot an arrow, but unfortunately she hit that poor chicken and not Zwyxnyzk.

I knew it was my task to execute Zwyxnyzk, and took off, sword drawn, with my Feather Of Taking Off (found in another dust-bin) to follow the chicken ...

FANZINES FOREVER...?

An overview of selected fanzines by Ste Dillon

Last issue we introduced ADVENTURER readers to the world of fanzines. Response to this article has mainly consisted of letters from fanzine editors, so I don't know if the rest of you are still in the dark, or if fanzine coverage bores you silly! So ... hoping that it's not the latter reason, several fanzines are opened up this issue, to see exactly what they contain. Addresses are given at the bottom of the page for those people interested in a particular 'zine. A word of caution, however, most editors would agree that it is best if you write first, to check the details and availability of the zine before sending any cash.

Next issue, a name from the fanzine world will be here to give a deeper insight into what goes on out there ... We also introduce ADVENTURERS to the Play By Mail world of gaming. Anybody connected with this phenomenon should contact Wayne at 69 Kiln Court, Newall Street, Poplar, London B17 7JP.

LANKHMAR STAR DAILY # 23 60p (LSD) by Rob Nott consists of 8 pages of letters, 6 concerned with Thunderdome, Robb's Sci-Fi postal game, 2 of fiction, 10 covering postal games updates, 'zine reviews, an article on PBMs, 4 pages on music and 3 pages about the editor's weekend! LSD is primarily a postal games 'zine with interests in music and the compulsory feedback pages.

2. TOME OF HORRORS # 360p (ToH) by Gordon Muir et al contains a mini article on spell casting, a 4 page epic(?) comedy episode, a fighting fantasy spoof, a 3-page 'zine review, Film reviews, 7 pages of letters and a few other mini-brief articles. Primarily, this is a sarcastic, sardonic look at games and the gaming world, held together by letters/communications with other 'zine fiends.

3. SOUND & FURY # 2 60p by James Wallis is more like a mini version of a professional magazine. By that, I mean it opens with reviews of games, comics and magazines. Following this is PHEADRA, the fantasy campaign games world. A 'zine spoof follows this, and a tongue-in-cheek article on pregnancy in RPGs. A mini fantasy scenario follows, a Paranoia adventure and an excellent parody of one of comic-books heroes, Judge Fredd. Definitely a different sort of 'zine.

4. RAGE IN EDEN # 3 70p by Rich Mumford begins with an introduction to the editor, his likes and dislikes, and even more about the editor. Next comes an article on writing articles, 3 pages of music chat and an article on modern witchcraft. 10(!) pages of letters follow this, and then the 'zine/PBM round-up (17 pages). This 'zine is really for those who participate in the PBM world.

5. STARQUESTER # 5 50p by Mark Oswin. Includes a good, but weird short story called "Family", a feature on the state of fandom and the responsibility of the 'zine editor. Next comes the 3-page 'zine review, 4 pages of music chat. 11 pages of letters and several small articles concerning games.

6. ZINE WITH NO NAME # 1 40p by Martin LeFevre is a list of 'zines including RPG and postal ones. This includes a section on new titles, 'zines which have folded, British 'zines, European, Colonial, hobby services such as the Central Gamestart Organiser for people who want to get started in postal games. A 'who's who in the hobby' is included. A sort of directory for anyone who's interested.

7. DAGON # 12 75p by Carl Ford is a 44 page Cthulhu 'zine relating fiction by Brian Lumley and R. J. Curran, a one player/one Keeper scenario outline, notes on the mythos and its propogators, a review of Cthulhoid horror movies, sixth sense in CoC, discourse with Sandy Peterson and letters pages. A real 'must' for Keepers and Cthulhoids.

8. UTTER DRIVEL # 3 45p by Ben Goodale includes the introduction to its RIVERWORLD rpg system, an (almost) systemless scenario called Time Chase. The postal campaign Disastria fills the next 9 pages. 5 pages of letters. Add a few chatty columns and an excellent mickey-take advert for Garden Gnomes Centre (we're serious about gnomes!) and you have UD.

9. IVORY TOWER # 5 50p by Geoff Dean is worth mentioning for the excellent centrefold cartoon. The 'zine covers editorial, lengthy 'zine reviews, a hand-written campaign scenario covering 9 pages. Letters fill 5 pages, a hand-written Runequest 2 scenario (8 pages), Traveller subsector and more editorial. Useful hardware, though the presentation is scrappy.

10. CONVERTED WRAITH # 1 55p from T. P. Stodart, covers book, comics and game reviews, 'zine reviews, oriental weapons guide, spoofs on Indiana Jones, Care Bears RPG, Games Day report and other miscellania.

11. XIMOC # 9 50p is a comic-type-publication from Davy Francis et al. This issue is full of rats, e.g. The Rat Race, introducing Roger the Biker Rat who, with the help of his rat-friends, manages to thwart a cat-plot which involves poisoned cheese in Tesco! A short and weird story follows, then on to Ciderman (our superhero spoof), and concluding with another Rat Adventure!

12. SPITTING FROM THE BATTLE MENTS # 3 55p by D. G. Evans contains an entertaining Traveller solo, a 9 page systemless scenario that provides a village background. An epic quest (?) involving King Arthur the Unavailable-for-comment covers 6 pages, rounded off with sarcasm, letters and reviews.

BUSHIDO™

The night was dark and the road deserted, as a lone traveller moved towards the lights of the village lower on the mountainside. He was Tokasi Benkai, samurai and warrior. Gold glinted from the fittings of his katana. The woods hid their shadows. They were bandits, and hungry. They were also five to his one. They attacked.

Adventures:

Valley of the Mists £4.45

Takishido's Debt 95p

FLASHING BLADES™

£10.75

A complete role playing game set in the era of the Three Musketeers. A world in which a man's courage and ambition knew no bounds. It was a time of adventure and of intrigue in which the rival interests of King and Cardinal played a deadly game across France and all of Europe.

Be prepared to be '...born with the gift of laughter and the sense that the world was mad.'

Adventures:

Parisian Adventures £4.45

High Seas £5.45

Cardinal's Peril £4.45

Chivalry and Sorcery is a role playing game that deals with the age of legendary and of chivalry. The game itself is almost as legendary as the age with which it deals. This boxed set is a totally new edition of this game which is known for its completeness and attention to detail. It describes a realistic and fully conceived world based on the feudal setting which is the basis of myth and the fantasy tradition in literature.

Supplements:

Sourcebook 1 £6.95 Sourcebook 2 £5.75

Swords and Sorcerers £5.45

Adventures:

The Dragonlord £4.45 The Songsmith £4.45

Chivalry and Sorcery™

£17.75

The boxed set provides solid basic play mechanics that have been over 2 years in playtesting. Rules are provided for modern firearms, NBC weapons and protections, mutations, survival, high technology and more. The game is structured to allow the referee to decide the nature of the holocaust that destroyed the world in which play will occur.

Adventures:

Operation Morpheus £6.95

Sydney: Wilderness Campaign £5.95

Into the Ruins £5.45

Empire Karo £4.45

AFTERMATH™

Aftermath is a game for 2 to 6 players and a referee in search of a different kind of adventure. It is a role playing excursion into a post-holocaust world.

SPIDER-VIGILANTE

Editorial By
J. JONAH JAMESON

Recently, one issue has taken over the headlines and front pages of this city's newspapers. Television and radio news casts seem obsessed with the controversy, politicians steer away from it as if it were the plague. I am referring, of course, to the subject of vigilantism.

The approach of most of the tabloids and news departments are taking is that of the "New Right" or conservative movement that is making itself known in this country by way of individual acts of vigilantism. The trend toward accepting vigilantes started years ago, and started in this very city. We have had vigilantes roaming our streets since then, posing as costumed crimefighters. But are they crimefighters, or are they power-hungry anarchists who thrive on their ability to be judge, jury and, sometimes, executioner all at once? This is the beginning of a twelve part editorial series covering the subject of vigilantism and those who use it in the guise of heroism. We will be looking at heroes who have been branded vigilantes in the past, but have proven time and time again that they serve and protect the city and the country; heroes such as the Avengers under government supervision. We will also look at the growing fear of mutants and whether they should be allowed to exercise their powers unregistered and uncontrolled. But, for the first two installments of, we will look at a costumed hoodlum (editorial continued on page 4)
